Privatization Process Begins in Mongolia

LD0205102891 Moscow TASS in English 1007 GMT 2 May 91

[By TASS correspondent Aleksandr Chernov]

[Text] Ulaanbaatar May 2 TASS— The sale of state property has been launched in Mongolia by a decision of a governmental commission, although the Mongolian Parliament only today began to discuss a privatisation bill.

By way of experiment, it is first planned to auction shops, public catering and everyday service establishments to citizens and non-state organisations.

There are no contradiction with the plans: preparations for sale by auction are being made in pursuance of the recent resolution passed by the Mongolian Parliament, privatisation commission secretary Ye. Gerelchulun told TASS.

According to the resolution, the government is obliged to launch privatisation without waiting for the adoption of a general legislative act by the small khural.

The planned auctions do not signify the cabinet's renunciation of previous plans to privatise property through the distribution of coupons among the population giving each citizen equal starting rights for participation in the process.

A special package of documents and regulations has been worked out and sent to local authorities in order to carry out the country's first-ever process of selling state property by auction.

According to the MONTSAME news agency, 12 service establishments in Ulaanbaatar have been prepared for sale by auction. More than 300 applications for them have been filed with the capital's executive board.

Army Political Department Official Interviewed
91US0091A Ulaanbaatar ARDYN ERH in Mongolian No 17, 11 Aug 90 p 1

[Interview with Colonel L. Purebdorj, Chief of the Mongolian People's Army Political Department: “No Time to Give the Army a Free Ride”]

[Text] The reader will certainly recall that an article with the title “No Time to Give the Army a Free Ride” appeared in a past issue of our paper. The article was intended by way of criticism of the fact that the army has continued to be given a free ride by the Mongolian people due to the presence in the army of a highly conservative personnel, totally outdated thinking and ingrained unworkable methods excessively caught up in the heavy ideology of many years. This is something which must absolutely be changed in view of present needs. Our reporter has interviewed Colonel L. Purebdorj, chief of the Mongolian People's Army Political Department about this, and more specifically about how the people's army is changing and being renewed politically and economically.

—First of all, tell the readers about yourself. Would you provide for us a brief biography?

—I was born in Sharga Somon of Gobi-Altay Aymag to a herdsman's family in 1937. Since being recruited for military service at the age of 21, I have since worked actively within the army. I am a member of the Mongolian People's Revolutionary Party, and of the Mongolian Writers' Union. I am married and have 4 children. I have written some 10 books such as "The
—You have just been appointed chief of the Political Department of the Mongolian Peoples Army. This is a matter of a person with new ideas appointed to a new post in a new era. What do you think about the changes and renewals of the present.

—Since I have been very much wishing for such a time to come finally, I have been speaking my innermost thoughts fully. However, it seems “like a dream” that things have changed so rapidly. For this reason, with some trepidation, on the one side, and with delight, on the other, I am confronted with difficulty, and am unable to make up my mind about what I should as a consequence actually decide to change, and how. And there are good reasons why I should be so concerned.

A contradiction has arisen between a new time and old views. I think that we are being strengthened by this contradiction.

—But in saying this are you not speaking a little abstractly, vaguely? Be more specific. For example, can you talk about changes taking place in the army?

—We know this contradiction exists in the army. Everything about military organization is subject to some influence of strongly established special regulation, and reflects a tradition of autonomy. Because of these, and other peculiarities, the military does not change easily and in some respects is extremely rigid.

Any changes in the military should be considered to begin with changing state law and special military regulation governing military service and life to give it a more humanitarian, more democratic character than it has now, in accordance with the political breath of a new age. Present laws and regulations are not in tune with the times. We must renew and refine military regulations. But what use will it be to produce a renewed and “refined” old law? Military service should, based upon renewed military laws and regulations, not be a personal and intellectual affliction, but rather something which promotes and interests a person physically and intellectually.

In other words, it would be proper, after views of respect for man, and the cherishing of man have been assimilated by military law and regulation, if military service were to be organized in accordance with these views. More specifically, this means that a man is not to be the implement of military service, but its pride. In this world there is nothing more wonderful than a man. If we can do this, we can make military service more productive for the nation, and something necessary for the individual.

—This speaks ill for the protection of the interests of your own army. What proof do you have?

—I will give examples. Many aspects of the life of officers and enlisted men are very uncertain. Such things as freely deciding where one wants to reside, acquiring housing, one’s spouse taking up specialized work etc., may be under the control of others. Although on the surface officers are highly paid and trained, their position is inferior to that of other intellectuals. However, due to the peculiarities of military service, children of officers pass through 3-6 schools before they finish the 10th grade. And although unit and station officers work on the average 10-12 hours a day, they receive no extra pay, and there are many other difficulties such as the fact that most military units are distant from cities, and some are even found in totally uninhabited areas.

Let us look at enlisted men. When they have finished their military service, discharged men have no legal guarantee of work in their old jobs. Perhaps you think that I am wrong when I say that when a working person is drafted and returns home, he is released with no legal guarantee whatever of work. A monetary assistance of a certain level is given to all person who have completed any level of school. However, not one red cent is paid to a person discharged from the army after completing military service, even though he has no guarantee that he can return to the place where he worked before. We Mongols, as a matter of policy, can think of nothing special to do for this person, separated from his home by distance for two years.

How is political work within the army being conceived of during this new era? There must surely be disagreements in this area?

—The present is the time of truth. If we intend to discuss the truth of things done in the past and now, in the present, with no hold barred, no matter how unpleasant this is, we can clear away some of our mistakes. During a time of renewal, everyone must have such a political goal. There are not a few questionable things in the past life of the army of this sort.

I myself think that another question regarding the renewal of political work is the matter of political organizations not explaining the ideology of any party, but rather propagandizing government policy, and their working solely on behalf of the government. This is because for many years government political education work has been mixed up in a confused way with the work of Mongolian People’s Revolutionary Party organizations.

—in a past issue of our paper there was a report entitled “No Time to Give the Army a Free Ride.” The principal subject of our conversation is what you are doing in terms of your understanding of the problem.

—I think (he said smiling) that the fact that there has been criticism in our political, government paper about the army has very much drawn our attention. We are first of all thankful that knowledgeable political workers with new ideas have expressed their views on the army energetically. I think that the article is something quite wonderful.
I think that what was written about is essentially correct. How can we not listen to that amount of criticism from the press, within it, from the political, government paper. I think particularly correct is the criticism of what was said at the time of the meeting of the central apparatus of the political military administration. It is true that those in the army take a somewhat outdated view of some things, as was stated in the criticism. We blush sometimes when we hear such things.

Also a problem with us is that we are unable to save money, be efficient and operate with minimal loss. However, just now it has become possible for us to save a little money by cutting personnel.

However, it occurs to be that the view that should be increased expenditures for human livelihood, directly for the benefit of human beings, is somehow the right one at this juncture, when the view of respect for man has just barely emerged. In this I am somewhat in disagreement with Galindib and Togoo. Unavoidable expenditures on personnel are very great with us.

—I wish you success in your new job.

—Thank you.
