[Text] The works of our great leader and teacher Chairman Mao Tse-tung are immortal monuments of Marxism-Leninism. In accordance with the decision of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, Volume V of the "Selected Works of Mao Tse-tung" has now been published and the subsequent volumes will come out in succession.

The previously published Volumes I to IV of the "Selected Works of Mao Tse-tung" contain important writings from the period of the new-democratic revolution. Volume V and succeeding volumes contain important writings from the period of the socialist revolution and socialist construction.

In the new historical period since the founding of the People's Republic of China, Comrade Mao Tse-tung, consistently upholding the principle of integrating the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice of the revolution, inherited, defended and developed Marxism-Leninism as he led our Party and our people in a series of struggles; these were struggles to carry out the socialist revolution and socialist construction, to oppose the revisionist lines of Kao-Jao, Peng Teh-huai, Liu Shao-chi, Lin Piao and Wang-Chang-Chiang-Yao, to fight against imperialism and the reactionaries of all countries and to combat modern revisionism, with the Soviet revisionist renegade clique as its center. During this period Comrade Mao Tse-tung's greatest contributions to theory were to systematically sum up the historical experience of the dictatorship of the proletariat in China and abroad, analyze the contradictions, classes and class struggle in socialist society by means of the fundamental concept of materialist dialectics, the unity of opposites, and thereby to reveal the law of development of socialist society and create the great theory of continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat. The new ideas, new theses, of Comrade Mao Tse-tung concerning the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat have greatly enriched the treasure house of Marxist-Leninist theory in the realms of philosophy, political economy and scientific socialism. They not only chart for the Chinese people the true road for consolidating the dictatorship of the proletariat, preventing capitalist restoration and building socialism, but are also of great and lasting world significance.

Volume V of the "Selected Works of Mao Tse-tung" contains important writings from September 1949 through 1957. It was in these writings that Comrade Mao Tse-tung for the first time put forward: the scientific thesis that the struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie, between the socialist road and the capitalist road, will still exist for a long time after the basic completion of the socialist transformation of the ownership of the means of production; the doctrine of correctly distinguishing and handling the two types of contradictions in socialist society that are different in nature, those between ourselves and the enemy and those among the people; the great theory of continuing the revolution under the dictatorship of the proletariat; and the ideas underlying the general line for building socialism. Later, particularly during the Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution, Comrade Mao Tse-tung continued to enrich and develop this body of brilliant thought on the basis of the practical experience of the revolution.

Comrade Mao Tse-tung was the greatest Marxist-Leninist of our time. Mao Tse-tung Thought is the victorious banner under which our Party, our army and our people will fight in unity and continue the revolution; it is a treasure shared in common by the international proletariat and the revolutionary people of all countries. Comrade Mao Tse-tung's thought and teachings will live for ever.

Some of Comrade Mao Tse-tung's writings from the period of the socialist revolution and socialist construction contained in the "Selected Works" have been published before; others have not and they include documents drafted by him, his manuscripts and official records of his speeches. Some necessary technical editing of the records of the speeches was done in the course of compilation.

ORDER TO THE CHINESE PEOPLE'S VOLUNTEERS (8 OCTOBER 1950)

--Excerpts of Comrade Mao Tse-tung's Order to the Chinese People's Volunteers

[Text] Leading Comrades of All Levels of the Chinese People's Volunteers:

(1) To aid the Korean people in their liberation war and to resist the aggression of U.S. imperialism and its running dogs, in order to protect the interests of the Korean people, the Chinese people, and the peoples of various countries in the East, the Chinese People's Volunteers are hereby ordered to immediately proceed across the Korean border, cooperate with our Korean comrades to combat the aggressors and seek glorious victories.

(2) Upon entering the territory of Korea, the Chinese People's Volunteers must show friendship and respect toward the Korean people, the Korean People's Army, the Korean Democratic People's Government, the Korean Workers' Party, other democratic parties and factions, and the leader of the Korean people, Comrade Kim Il-sung, and strictly observe military and political disciplines. These constitute an extremely important political foundation to assure the completion of a military mission.

(3) The Chinese People's Volunteers must intensively assess all possible and inevitable difficult situations and overcome the difficulties with a high degree of enthusiasm, courage, and meticulousness, and the spirit of diligence and endurance. At present the international and domestic situation as a whole is favorable to us and unfavorable to the aggressors. As long as the comrades are firm and courageous, skillful in rallying the local people, and expert in combatting the aggressors, final victory will be ours.

THE CHINESE PEOPLE'S VOLUNTEERS SHOULD CHERISH EVERY HILL, EVERY RIVER, EVERY TREE AND EVERY BLADE OF GRASS IN KOREA (19 JANUARY 1951)

--Comrade Mao Tse-tung's instructions to the Chinese People's Volunteers

[Text] The comrades of China and Korea must unite together like brothers, sharing fortunes and misfortunes, and depending on one another in life and death, and struggle to the final end against the common enemy. The Chinese comrades must regard all Korean matters as their own, educate the combat commanders and fighters to cherish Korea's every hill and every river, every blade of grass and every tree, and refrain from taking one needle or one thread belonging to the Korean people, in the same manner as we do in China. This is the political foundation of victory. So long as we can do so, we will win the final victory.

ON THE POLICIES FOR OUR WORK IN TIBET—DIRECTIVE OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE CHINESE COMMUNIST PARTY (6 APRIL 1952)

--Inner-Party directive drafted for the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party which was sent to the Southwest Bureau and the Working Committee in Tibet and communicated to the Northwest Bureau and the Sinkiang Sub-Bureau

[Text] The Central Committee basically agrees with the directive wired by the Southwest Bureau and the Southwest Military Region on 2 April to the Tibet Work Committee and the Tibet Military Region, finding that the basic policy (except in regard to the reorganization of the Tibetan army) adopted in the wire and the many concrete measures are correct. Only thus will our army occupy an invincible position in Tibet.

The situation in Tibet is different from Sinkiang. Whether in politics or economy, Tibet is far behind Sinkiang. Even when Wang Chen's [3769 7201] unit entered Sinkiang, we had to devote our full attention to careful calculations in advance and rely on self-revitalization and self-sufficiency in production. Now they have established themselves and won the enthusiastic support of the minorities. Currently, they are in the process of reducing rent and interest and will introduce land reform in the coming winter. The masses will support us even more enthusiastically. Vehicle transport moves easily between Sinkiang and other areas, and the minorities have greatly benefited in material welfare. As for Tibet, it will not be ready for rent reduction or land reform for at least the next 2 or 3 years. Sinkiang has several hundred thousand Chinese, while Tibet has almost none at all. Our army is situated in an entirely different minority environment. We can only depend on two basic policies to win the masses and place ourselves in an invincible position. The first is to calculate carefully and attain self-sufficiency in production and to thereby influence the masses. This is the most fundamental link. Even if highways are built we cannot rely on them for shipping large amounts of grain. India may possibly agree to ship grain into Tibet in exchange, but our stand must be that, if one of these days India does not send us grain, our army will still survive. We must devote all our efforts and adopt appropriate means to rally the Dalai Lama and the majority of the upper-level group and isolate the minority of undesirables in order to attain our goal of gradually reforming the economy and politics of Tibet after a number of years and without bloodshed. But we must also be prepared for the possibility of a revolt and attack against us by the Tibetan army led by the undesirables so that in case of such an eventuality, our army will be able to survive and hold firm in Tibet. All these things depend on our careful calculations and self-sufficiency in production. Only by making this most basic policy the foundation will we attain our goal. The second item, which is feasible and mandatory, is to establish trade relations with India and the interior so that Tibet's imports and exports will tend toward balancing and the living standard of the Tibetans will not suffer in any manner due to the entry of our army. We must also seek to improve their living somewhat. If we cannot solve the issues of production and trade, we will lose the existing material foundation, the undesirables will have the capital to incite the backward masses and the Tibetan army against us and our policy of rallying the majority and isolating the minority will become weak and unrealizable.

In the Southwest Bureau's wire of 2 April there is only one point which requires further consideration: Whether it is feasible and proper to reorganize the Tibetan army and form a military administration commission within a short time. Our view is that we will not reorganize the Tibetan army at present, nor formally form a military subdistrict, nor establish a military administration commission. Temporarily we will leave everything as is and drag on until a year or two later when our army has truly attained self-sufficiency in production and won the support of the masses before discussing such issues. Within a year or two, two situations may possibly develop: Our upper level united front policy of rallying the majority and isolating the minority may prove effective and the Tibetan masses may gradually become more trustful of us, so that the undesirables and the Tibetan army will not dare to riot; or, the undesirables may find us weak and lead the army to revolt, and our army in self-defense will launch counterattacks and deal blows to them. Either of these two situations will be beneficial to us. From the point of view of the Tibetan upper level group, the grounds for implementing the agreement in its entirety and reorganizing the Tibetan Army are inadequate. It will be different a few years hence. They may then feel that implementing the agreement in its entirety and reorganizing the Tibetan army are the only things to do. If the Tibetan army stages an uprising, or even several uprisings, and these are quashed by our army, we will have more grounds to reorganize it. It seems that not just the two ssu-lun's*, but also the

*"Ssu-lun" is the highest administrative officer under the Dalai Lama. The two "ssu-lun's" at that time were the reactionary tenant slave masters Lu K'ang-wa [7627 1660 1216] and Lo-sang Cha-hsi [5012 2718 2610 0823].
Dalai Lama and the majority of his group, feel that they were compelled to accept the agreement and they are unwilling to implement it. At present, not only do we lack the material foundation for implementing it in its entirety, but we have neither the mass foundation nor the upper level foundation for it. Implementation by coercion will do more harm than good. Since they are unwilling to implement it, let it go; we will not implement it at present but wait a while and see.

The longer we drag on, the more grounds will we have and the less grounds will they have. Dragging on will not be very detrimental to us; it may even be more beneficial. Let them commit bad deeds of abusing the people and contradicting reason while we concentrate on such good deeds as production, trade, road building, medicine and a united front (rallying the majority, patient education) in order to win the masses and wait until the time is right before discussing the issue of implementing the agreement in its entirety. If they feel that elementary education should not be undertaken, then we can stop pursuing the subject.

The recent demonstration in Lhasa must be interpreted not just as something instigated by the two ssu-lun's, but also as an expression of the majority of the Dalai Lama group. The content of their petition is very strategic; it does not indicate a break but only asks us to concede. In the article on resuming the method of the Ch'ing Dynasty and not having a Liberation Army garrison stationed in Tibet, it hints that this is not their true intent. They well know that this cannot be done, and they are only attempting to use this article as a means of bargaining. In the petition, they criticize the 14th Dalai Lama, relieving him of political responsibilities for the demonstrations. They come out in defense of the national interest of Tibet; they know that their military strength is inferior to ours but that their social strength is superior. We should accept the petition in fact (not in form) and postpone implementation of the agreement in its entirety. That they chose this time before the arrival of the Panchen Lama to hold a demonstration was premeditated. After the Panchen Lama arrives in Lhasa, they may court him vigorously and recruit him for their group. If we work successfully and the Panchen Lama is not tricked by them and arrives safely in Shigatse, the situation will become more favorable to us. However, our lack of material foundation will not change for the time being, nor will their superiority in social strength. Therefore, the reluctance of the Dalai Lama group to implement the agreement in its entirety will not change for the time being. Currently, in form we should adopt the offensive, rebuking them for the irrationality of the demonstrations and petition (breaching the agreement), but in substance we should be prepared to yield and wait until the conditions are ripe before launching an offensive (implementing the agreement).

Please consider and wire us your views.

During last year, we fought, negotiated and stabilized simultaneously.

The situation of the Korean war stabilized after July last year, but the domestic financial and economic conditions failed to do so; we still lacked confidence at that time. In the past, we could only say, "Commodity prices are basically stabilized; income and expenditures are close to balancing," indicating that commodity prices were still not stabilized and that income and expenditures were still not balanced. Too little income and too much expenditure—it was a problem. Therefore, the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee held a meeting in September last year and proposed production increases and stringent thrift. In October, I again proposed production increases and thrift at the third meeting of the First National Committee of the Political Consultative Conference. In the production increase and thrift movement, relatively serious corruption, waste, and bureaucratism were uncovered. The "three-anti" movement was launched in December and immediately thereafter the "five-anti" movement. Now the "three-anti" and "five-anti" movements have been successfully concluded, the issues have been clarified and all is well in the country.

The expenditures last year for the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea were roughly the same as those for domestic construction, about half and half. This year is different. It is estimated that the war expenditures will be only half of last year's. Currently, our troops have been reduced but our equipment has been reinforced. During our more than two decades of fighting in the past, we never had an air force; there were only those of others which bombed us. Now we have an air force, and we also have anti-aircraft guns, cannons and tanks. The resist U.S.
aggression and aid Korea war is a big school where we engage in a large maneuver. Such a maneuver is better than a military school. If the war continues next year, our entire army will have undergone training by rotation.

For this war we originally had three problems: (1) whether we could fight; (2) whether we could defend; (3) whether we would have food.

The problem of whether we could fight was solved within two or three months. The enemy had more cannons, but its morale was low. It was a case of more metal than morale.

The problem of whether we could defend was solved last year. The solution was tunnels. We dug two levels of tunnels. When the enemy attacked, we went underground. Sometimes when the enemy occupied the surface, the underground still belonged to us. When the enemy took up positions, we would counterattack and inflict heavy casualties. We acquired foreign cannons by this native method. The enemy was helpless against us.

The problem of food, i.e., supplies, was not solved for a long time. In those days we did not think of digging tunnels and storing food in them. Now we know better. Every division has warehouses and a three-month supply of grain, as well as auditoriums. They live very comfortably.

Now the policy is clear, the position consolidated, the supply guaranteed and each and every soldier understands that we must persevere to the bitter end.

Just how long must we fight? How long must we negotiate? I feel that we must negotiate, fight and seek peace.

Why do we want to seek peace? The war will not last 30 years, 100 years, because a long-term war will be detrimental to America.

(1) Manpower: To fight for the 10,000 prisoners of war detained by us, they lost over 30,000 men. Their total manpower was much less than ours.

(2) Money: They require over 10 billion U.S. dollars a year, but we spend much less. Our war expenditures this year will be reduced by half compared with last year. The money collected from the "three-anti" and "five-anti" movements will be sufficient for 18 months of war, and the money from production increases and thrift can be entirely spent on domestic construction.

(3) They have insurmountable international and domestic contradictions.

(4) There is also the issue of strategy. The strategic point of America is Europe. When they sent troops to invade Korea, they did not expect us to send troops to aid it.
We can handle matters relatively easily. We are in complete control of domestic matters. Nevertheless, we are not America's chief of staff. America's chief of staff is their own man. Therefore, whether the Korean war will continue, Korea and we can have only half the say.

In view of the general situation, it will be detrimental for America to continue the war.

The theory of an imminent World War III is alarmist. We must seek 10 years' time to build industry and lay a firm foundation. Everyone must unite successfully and make a clear distinction between the enemy and ourselves. We are strong today because of the unity of the people of the entire nation, the cooperation of those attending the meeting today and the cooperation of the democratic parties and factions and the people's organizations. Unity and drawing a clear distinction between the enemy and ourselves are extremely important. Mr Sun Yat-sen was a good man, but why did the 1911 revolution led by him fail? The reasons were: (1) Land was not divided; (2) He failed to recognize the importance of suppressing the counter-revolution; and (3) He was not sufficiently vigorous in resisting imperialism. Besides the distinction between the enemy and ourselves, there is also, internally, the distinction between right and wrong. When the two are compared, the distinction between right and wrong is secondary. With the majority of corrupt elements, for instance, it is the issue of right and wrong and they can be reformed and are different from counterrevolutionaries.

All the democratic parties and factions and religious circles must conduct education, guard against being tricked by imperialism and refrain from taking the side of the enemy. Take Buddhism, for instance. It does not have much connection with imperialism; it is basically linked with feudalism. Due to the land issue, the monks were included in anti-feudalism, but those attacked were the head and resident monks. When the minority was knocked down, the monks in general were liberated. I do not believe in Buddhism, but I do not oppose the organization of a Buddhist federation to clarify the line between the enemy and ourselves. Will the united front be abolished one day? I do not advocate its abolition. No matter who it is, as long as he truly makes a clear distinction between the enemy and ourselves and serves the people we want to unite with him.

Our country has a future; it has hopes. In the past, we wondered whether the national economy would recover in three years. After two and a half years of struggle, it has recovered and we have started systematic construction. Everyone must unite and make a clear distinction between the enemy and ourselves so that our country will progress steadily.
HAIL THE SIGNAL VICTORY OF THE CHINESE PEOPLE'S VOLUNTEERS (24 OCTOBER 1952)

—Instructions drafted by Comrade Mao Tse-tung for the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and the Central Military Commission to the responsible persons of the Chinese People's Volunteers

Peking MAO TSE-TUNG HSUAN-CHI in Chinese Vol V, 1977 pp 70-71

[Text] Our Volunteers, in coordination with the Korean People's Army, began a tactical counteroffensive against the entire enemy front on 18 September and, within a month, destroyed and wounded over 30,000 enemy troops and won a tremendous victory. The Central Committee and the Military Commission wish to extend to you and all the combat commanders and fighters their enthusiastic congratulations. In this type of operation, at certain selected crucial tactical points, we concentrate our superior forces and fire power, take surprise actions, and launch attacks to wipe out platoons, companies, or battalions of the enemy army in whole or in greater parts; subsequently, when the enemy launches a counterattack, we inflict large numbers of casualties on the enemy in repeated operations; thereafter, in regard to the key points taken by us, we will, according to the situation, defend those which are defensible and abandon those which are indefensible, thus preserving our initiative and preparing for future counterattacks. By continuing this method of operation, we will subdue the enemy and force him to fall back on compromises and end the Korean war. Ever since our army adopted the firm position warfare in July last year, the amount of losses inflicted on the enemy army has far surpassed its losses in the mobile warfare prior thereto. Meanwhile, our army's losses have been greatly reduced. In regard to our personnel losses in terms of the Volunteers alone, in the 15 months since July last year, there has been an average reduction of over two-thirds per month compared with the eight previous months. This situation is a result of relying on the positions and following the above method of operation. In the current period beginning 18 September, such method of operation has become more organizational and more of the nature of the entire line; therefore, it deserves special attention.

Now on the occasion of the second anniversary of the Volunteers' operation abroad, it is hoped that you will summarize your experiences, raise your organizational essence, improve your tactics, economize on ammunition, unite with your Korean comrades and people more closely, and win greater victories in future battles.
OUR GREAT VICTORY IN THE WAR TO RESIST U.S. AGGRESSION AND AID KOREA AND OUR FUTURE TASKS (12 SEPTEMBER 1953)

--Comrade Mao Tse-tung's speech at the 24th Session of the Central People's Government Council

[Text] After three years, a great victory has been won in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea, and one phase has come to an end.

What did we rely on to win victory in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea? A while ago you mentioned correct leadership. Leadership was one factor. Without correct leadership, we could not have succeeded. Nevertheless, the main factor was that ours was a people's war, supported by the people of the whole nation, with the peoples of China and Korea fighting shoulder to shoulder.

In fighting such an enemy as U.S. imperialism, their weapons were many times superior to ours, and yet we could overcome them, forcing them to seek peace. How did we accomplish it?

First, in military affairs, the U.S. aggressors were placed in an unfavorable position—a passive position. If they did not seek peace, their entire line would have been broken, and Seoul could possibly fall into the hands of the Korean people. This situation could be seen in the summer of last year.

Both sides of the war claimed that their own defense line was impregnable. On our side, it was truly impregnable. Our soldiers and cadres were ingenious, courageous, and fearless, while the aggressor troops of the U.S. feared death. Their officers were also relatively rigid, not so flexible. Their line was not consolidated, let alone impregnable.

The problems confronting us were, first, whether we could fight, subsequently, whether we could defend, thereafter, whether we could guarantee supply, and finally, whether we could withstand germ warfare. These four problems, one after another, were all solved. Our troops became stronger as they fought. In the summer of this year, we were already able to break through 21 kilometers of the enemy frontal position in one hour, discharge several hundred thousand rounds of artillery shells in concentrated firing, and penetrate 18 kilometers. If we continued, two, three, or four times, the entire enemy line would have been broken.

Second, in politics, the enemy had many insolvable problems within, and the peoples of the whole world demanded peace.

Third, in economics, the enemy spent much money in the war of aggression in Korea, and could not balance his budget.

With the combination of the above factors, the enemy had no choice but to seek peace. Meanwhile, the first was the main factor. Without it, it would not have been easy to discuss peace with the enemy. U.S. imperialism is very arrogant, and will not be reasonable wherever it can get away with it. If it talks reason, it is being forced to do so.

In the Korean war, enemy casualties totaled 1.09 million. Naturally, we also paid a price. However, our casualties were much lighter than our original estimate. After we had our trenches, our casualties became even less. We grew stronger as we fought. The Americans could not dislodge our position. On the contrary, they were always wiped out by us.

A while ago, everyone mentioned the factor of leadership. I feel that leadership was one factor, and the most major factor was the masses thinking of the means. Our cadres and soldiers devised all kinds of means to fight battles. Let me give an example: In the first month of the war, our vehicle losses were very heavy. What should we do? Besides the leaders, we relied mainly on the masses to devise the means of solution. Over 10,000 people stood guard on both sides of the roadway, firing signal guns whenever enemy planes were spotted, so that the drivers could either take evasive actions or find a hiding place for the trucks. Meanwhile, the vehicular roadways were widened, and many new ones built, so that the trucks could travel back and forth easily. Thus, vehicle losses were reduced from the 40 percent at the beginning to less than 1 percent. Subsequently, underground warehouses and auditoriums were built. The enemy could drop bombs above while we held mass meetings below. Every time they thought of the Korean battlefield, some of those living in Peking felt that it was fairly dangerous. Naturally, there was danger, but, as long as everyone tried to think of the means, it was not such a big thing.

Our experience has been that when we relied on the people and with a relatively correct leadership, we were able to use our inferior equipment to overcome the enemy with its superior equipment.

The victory in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea is a great victory and one of great significance.
First, together with the Korean people, we fought back to and defended the 38th parallel. This was very important. Had this not been done, the front line would have remained at Yalu and T'u-men rivers, and the people of Shenyang, An-shan, and Fu-shun would not have been able to settle down to production.

Second, we gained military experiences. The army, air force, navy, infantry, artillery, engineer corps, tank units, railway units, air defense units, and signal corps of our Chinese People's Volunteers and our medical and logistics units gained experiences in actual combat against the aggressor troops of the United States. This time, we learned something about the U.S. troops. Before coming into contact with them, we were afraid of them. But after fighting them for 33 months, we understood them thoroughly. U.S. imperialism is not frightening; there is not much to it. We have gained this one item of experience, and it is an invaluable one.

Third, we raised the political awareness of the people of the whole nation.

These three points led to a fourth point: A new imperialist war of aggression against China has been postponed; a third world war has been postponed.

The imperialist aggressors must understand that the Chinese people have now been organized and that they must not be provoked. If provoked, the matter will be hard to handle.

Hereafter, the enemy may still be able to fight. Even if they do not, they will inevitably use all kinds of means to make trouble, such as sending secret agents to conduct sabotage. They have set up gigantic secret service structures in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Japan. Yet, we have gained experience in the war to resist America and aid Korea. As long as we activate the masses and rely on the people, we will have the means to handle them.

Our present situation is not the same as in the winter of 1950. At that time, were the American aggressors on the other side of the 38th parallel? No, they were on the other side of the Yalu and T'u-men rivers. Did we have the experience of fighting the U.S. aggressors? No. Were we familiar with the American troops? No. Now, all such conditions have changed. If U.S. imperialism does not postpone a new war of aggression, if they say: "We want to fight," then we will confront them with the three points mentioned above. If they say: "We will not fight," then we will come to the fourth point. This will also serve to prove the superiority of our people's democratic dictatorship.

Do we invade others? We will not invade anyone. However, if others invade us, we will fight, and fight to the finish.

The Chinese people have this one principle: We support peace, but we are not afraid of war; we can handle either alternative. We have the support of the people. In the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea, the people enthusiastically applied to join the army. We were very strict in selecting among the applicants, only one out of every one hundred was selected. The people said that it was more stringent than picking a son-in-law. If U.S. imperialism wants to fight again, we will do so.

Wars cost money. Yet, the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea did not cost very much. The several years of war did not even cost us one year of industrial and commercial taxes. Naturally, if we can avoid war and save money, it is even better, because we need money now for construction, and the peasants still have difficulties in their livelihood. The agricultural tax of last year and the year before was on the heavy side. Thus, some of our friends criticized us. They asked for "benevolent administration," as if they represented the interest of the peasants. Did we agree with their views? We did not. At that time, it was necessary to exert our every effort to strive for victory in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea. In regard to the peasants and the people of the entire country, their livelihood experienced some temporary difficulties. But would victory or saving some money be more beneficial to them? Naturally, victory in the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea would be more beneficial. Last year and the year before, we collected a little more agricultural tax, because we needed money for the war. This year it is different. There is no increase in agricultural tax, and we have stabilized the amount of tax.

In regard to "benevolent administration," we do subscribe to it. However, what was the greatest "benevolent administration"? It was to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea. To do so, there must be sacrifice, expenses, and more agricultural taxes. When we collected a little more agricultural tax, some people immediately hollered, claiming that they represented the interest of the peasants. I do not support such opinion.

The war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea was benevolent administration; at present developing industrial construction is also benevolent administration.

There are two kinds of so-called benevolent administration: One is for the people's current interest; the other is for their long-range interest, such as the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea and building heavy industry. The former is minor benevolent administration, while the latter is major benevolent administration. Both must be given consideration, for otherwise it will be wrong. Then, which one should be stressed? We should stress the major benevolent administration. At present the stress of our benevolent administration should be placed on the building of heavy industry. To build, we need money. Therefore, while the people's livelihood must be improved, temporarily the improvement cannot be much. In other words, the people's livelihood must be improved, but not greatly improved; we must give consideration to the people's livelihood, but not great consideration. It is a bias to give consideration to the benevolent administration at the expense of major benevolent administration.

At present some of our friends are onesidedly emphasizing the minor benevolent administration. Actually, they want us to stop fighting the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea and give up on heavy industry. We must criticize this erroneous idea. This idea also existed in the Communist Party, and we encountered it in Yanan. In 1941, the Shensi-Kansu-Ningsia frontier region collected 200,000 piculs of public grain, and some people hollered, claiming that the Communist Party had no concern for the peasants. Some individual leading cadres of the party also linked this to the issue of so-called benevolent administration. I criticized it at that time. What was the biggest benevolent administration at that time? It was to smash Japanese imperialism. If less public grain was levied, we would have to reduce the 8th Route Army and the New 4th Army, which would be favorable to Japanese imperialism. Therefore, this idea actually represented the interest of Japanese imperialism and constituted an aid to it.

At present one phase of the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea has ended. If the U.S. still wants to fight, we will fight. If we fight, we must levy grain, and we must perform work among the peasants, persuading them to make a contribution. Only thus do we truly represent their interest. Hollering is actually in the interest of U.S. imperialism.

There are major principles and minor principles. The living standard of the people in the whole nation must be improved year after year, but improvement must not be excessive. If it is excessive, then the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea cannot be fought, or so conscientiously fought. We fight thoroughly, conscientiously, and with our full effort. As long as we have it, whatever the Korea front wants we will supply it. We have been doing this for the past several years.
THE CHINESE PEOPLE CANNOT BE COWED BY THE ATOM BOMB (28 JANUARY 1955)

--Essential points of Comrade Mao Tse-tung's talk with the first Finnish ambassador to China, Cay (Carl Johan) Sundstroem, when the latter presented his credentials

[Text] China and Finland are friendly nations. Our relationship is built on the foundation of the five principles of peaceful coexistence.

China and Finland have never had any conflict. Among the European nations, there were wars in history between China and England, France, Germany, the czarist Russia, Italy, the Austria-Hungary Empire, and Holland. These nations came from far away to invade China, such as the joint forces of England and France and the eight-nation joint forces, including the U.S. and Japan. A total of 16 nations, including Turkey and Luxemburg, participated in the Korean War. All these aggressor nations proclaimed their love of peace and accused Korea and China of aggression.

Today, the dangers of a world war and the threat against China come mainly from the warmongers in the U.S. They encroach upon China's Taiwan and the Taiwan Strait, and wish to launch an atomic war. We have two principles: First, we do not want war; second, if anyone should invade us, we will hit back firmly. This is how we educate the Communist Party members and the people of the whole country. The U.S. atomic blackmail cannot intimidate the Chinese people. China has 600 million people and 9.6 million square kilometers of land. The atom bombs of the U.S. cannot wipe out the Chinese people. No matter how powerful its atom bombs are, if they are dropped on China, pierce the planet of earth, and destroy it, it will be a major event in terms of the solar system, but not very significant in terms of the universe as a whole.

We have an old saying: Millet plus rifles. In the U.S., it is airplanes plus atom bombs. Nevertheless, if the U.S. with airplanes plus atom bombs should launch a war of aggression against China, then the China of millet plus rifles will win. The peoples of the whole world will support us.
As a result of the first world war, the czar, the landowners, and the capitalists of Russia were swept away. As a result of the second world war, Chiang Kai-shek and the landowners in China were overthrown, and the Eastern European nations and some Asian nations were liberated. If the U.S. launches a third world war, then, even if it lasts 8 or 10 years, the ruling class of the U.S., Great Britain, and their accessories will be wiped out as a result, and the greater part of the world will become communist-led countries. The result of a world war will be unfavorable to the warmongers but favorable to the communist party and the revolutionary people of the world. If they wish to launch wars, then, do not blame us for promoting revolutions, i.e., accusing us vociferously for "subversive activities." If they do not promote wars, they may survive a little longer on earth. The sooner they launch wars, the sooner they will perish. By that time a United Nations of the people will be formed—maybe in Shanghai, maybe in some place in Europe, or may even be in New York, if the U.S. warmongers have been completely eliminated by then.
U.S. IMPERIALISM IS A PAPER TIGER (14 JULY 1956)

--A part of Comrade Mao Tse-tung's interview with two Latin Americans

[Text] The U.S. displays everywhere the anticomunist sign for the purpose of attaining its goal in invading others.

The U.S. is indebted everywhere. It is indebted to the Central and South American nations, and the Asian and African nations. It is also indebted to the European and Oceanian nations. The whole world, including Great Britain, does not like the U.S. The broad masses of people do not like it. Japan does not like it, because of its oppression. None of the nations in the East has escaped U.S. aggression. It invaded China's Taiwan. Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Vietnam, and Pakistan have also suffered from its aggression, and some of them are its allies. The people are unhappy about it, and the authorities of some countries are also unhappy about it.

All oppressed nations must become independent.

Everything will change. The rotten and great forces will yield to the newborn and small forces. The weak will become strong, because the majority of the people demand a change. The great power of U.S. imperialism will become small, because the American people are also dissatisfied with their own government.

Those of my generation have experienced the changes. Some of us here at this meeting were born in the Ch'ing Dynasty, and some during the Chinese Republic.

The Ch'ing Dynasty was overthrown long ago. Who did it? The party and the people led by Sun Yat-sen did it together. Sun Yat-sen's strengths were small, and the officials of the Ch'ing Dynasty found him insignificant. His many uprisings always ended in failure. But finally, it was Sun Yat-sen who overthrew the Ch'ing Dynasty. The big is not frightening.
The big will be overthrown by the small, and the small will become big. After overthrowing the Ch'ing Dynasty, Sun Yat-sen failed, because he did not satisfy the people's demands, such as their demand for land and their demand to resist imperialism. Nor did he realize that the counter-revolution must be suppressed, and the counter-revolutionaries at that time were active everywhere. Subsequently, he met with failure in the hands of Yuan Shih-k'ai, the leader of the Northern warlords. Yuan Shih-k'ai was more powerful than Sun Yat-sen. Nevertheless, the following pattern still emerged: When the weak united with the people, it became strong; when the strong was against the people, it became weak. Sun Yat-sen's bourgeois democratic revolutionaries cooperated with our Communist Party and defeated the warlord system left by Yuan Shih-k'ai.

Recognized by the governments of all nations in the world, Chiang Kai-shek's regime lasted 22 years, and was most powerful. We were weak. After suppression by the counter-revolution, only several thousand party members were left out of the original 50,000. The enemy made trouble everywhere. Nevertheless, the following pattern still emerged: The powerful failed because they were divorced from the people; the weak succeeded because they united with the people and worked for the people. The result was precisely so.

During War of Resistance Against Japan, Japan was very powerful. The Kuomintang troops were driven to outlying areas, and the armed forces led by the Communist Party could only launch guerrilla warfare in the rural areas behind enemy lines. Japan occupied China's large cities of Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai, Nanking, Wu-han, and Canton. Nevertheless, Japan's militarism, and Germany's Hitler, also followed the above pattern and collapsed in a few years.

We underwent many difficulties, driven from the south to the north, and our numbers dwindled from several hundred thousand to several ten thousand. After the Long March of 25,000 li, we had only 25,000 men left.

In our party history, there were many "leftist" and rightist line errors. The most serious were Ch'en Tu-hsü's right tendencies and Wang Ming's "left" tendencies. In addition, there were also the rightist mistakes of Chang Kuo-t'ao and Kao Kang.

Mistakes have their uses. They may be used to educate the people, educate the party. We had many negative teachers, such as Japan, the U.S., Chiang Kai-shek, Ch'en Tu-hsü, Li Li-san, Wang Ming, Chang Kuo-t'ao, and Kao Kang. We had to pay a great price in order to learn from them. In history, Great Britain has fought us many times. Great Britain, the U.S., Japan, France, Germany, Italy, the czarist Russia, and Holland all coveted this land of ours. They are all our negative teachers, and we are their students.
After we underwent the war of resistance period and fought Japan, our troops developed to 900,000. Thereafter it was the liberation war. Our guns and cannons were inferior to those of the Kuomintang, and the Kuomintang had 4 million troops. After three years of fighting, a total of 8 million were wiped out by us. The Kuomintang, with the help of U.S. imperialism, could not defeat us. The powerful could not win; the weak always succeeded.

At present U.S. imperialism is very powerful, but not truly so. It is very weak politically, because it is divorced from the broad masses of people. No one likes it, not even the American people. Powerful on the surface, it actually is not frightening, it is a paper tiger. A tiger on the surface, it is made of paper and cannot withstand the wind and the rain. I see the U.S. as a paper tiger.

The entire history proves this point; the history of thousands of years of the class society of mankind proves this point: The strong must yield to the weak. It is thus with America.

Only if imperialism is eliminated will there be peace. There will come the day when the paper tiger will be destroyed. Nevertheless, it will not disappear on its own. It will be destroyed by the wind and the rain.

When we say that U.S. imperialism is a paper tiger, we are talking in terms of strategy. As a whole, we must hold it in contempt. From each and every part, we must give it serious attention. It has claws and teeth. If it is to be liquidated, we must tackle the parts one by one. If it has 10 teeth, for instance, we will knock out one the first time, leaving 9. We then will knock out another one, leaving 8. After all the teeth have been knocked out, it still has claws. If we proceed conscientiously step by step, we will succeed finally.

Strategically, we will hold U.S. imperialism in complete contempt. Tactically, we must give it serious attention. When we struggle against it, we must pay serious attention—battle by battle, item by item. At present the U.S. is powerful, but, in the broad sphere, as a whole, and by long-range consideration, it does not have the support of the people, its policies are unpopular, and it oppresses and exploits the people. As a result of this point, the tiger will perish. Therefore, it is not frightening, and one may hold it in contempt. However, the U.S. still has strengths, producing over 100 million tons of steel annually and attacking people everywhere. Therefore, we must struggle against it, fighting with a tremendous effort, and contesting position after position.

It looks like that the American and the Asian and African nations will continue to quarrel with the United States, quarreling to the bitter end, until the paper tiger is destroyed by the wind and the rain.
To resist U.S. imperialism, the European immigrants in Central and South American nations must unite with the native Indians. The white immigrants from Europe may be divided into two categories: The rulers and the ruled. Thus, the oppressed white people will easily become close to the natives, because their positions are identical.

We are in the same position as our Latin American and our Asian-African friends, and we do the same kind of work, doing something for the people and reducing the imperialist oppression of the people. If we are successful, we will fundamentally eliminate imperialist oppression. On this point, we are comrades.

In resisting imperialist oppression, our stand is identical with yours, the only differences being our location, race, and language. But there is an essential difference between us and imperialism. We find it unpleasant every time we see imperialism.

Why do we want imperialism? The Chinese people do not want imperialism; the peoples of the whole world do not want imperialism. There is no necessity for its existence.

STRENGTHEN PARTY UNITY AND CARRY FORWARD THE PARTY'S TRADITIONS (30 AUGUST 1956)

--Speech at the first session of the preparatory meeting for the Eighth National Congress of the Communist Party of China [Text] Today we hold the preliminary meeting of the Eighth National Congress. This meeting will last more than 10 days. The main things to be accomplished are (1) preparing the documents of the Congress, (2) primary election of the Central Committee, and (3) preparing the drafts of speeches at the Congress.

Now I will discuss my views.

My first point concerns the goal and purpose of the Congress. What are the issues to be solved and the goals to be reached by this Congress? In general, it is to sum up the experiences gained since the Seventh Congress, unite the entire party and unite all domestic and international forces which can be united in the struggle to build a great socialist China.

As to summarizing experiences, these are very abundant. However, we cannot list all the facts, but must seize the crucial points, start from the practical and summarize according to the Marxist viewpoint. Such summarization will furnish our entire party with a motivation and make our work more successful than ever before.

That ours is a great, glorious and correct party is publicly recognized by the whole world. In the past, some foreign comrades wondered what we were doing. Many did not comprehend our policy on the national bourgeoisie, nor did they understand very well the rectification movements we carried out. Now, I think more people understand them. One may say that most understand them. Naturally, there may still be some who do not understand. In the nation, or even in the party, there may be some who do not understand and consider that the line since the Seventh Congress has not been that correct. Nevertheless, the facts are before us. We undertook two revolutions. One was the bourgeois democratic revolution to seize the political power of the nation; the other was the proletarian socialist revolution to realize socialist reform and build a socialist state. That we have accomplished much in the 11 years since the Seventh Congress is recognized by the entire nation and the whole world, even by the foreign bourgeoisie. The two revolutions have proved that from the Seventh Congress to the present, the line of the Party Central Committee has been correct.

The October Revolution overthrew the bourgeoisie. It was something new in the world. The international bourgeoisie, with its eyes closed, cursed it and said it was no good. The Russian bourgeoisie was a counterrevolutionary class. At that time, setting aside state capitalism, it slacked off, sabotaged and picked up the gun to fight. The Russian proletariat had no choice but to destroy it. The bourgeoisie in various nations was enraged and reviled the Russian proletariat. We here are relatively more lenient toward the national bourgeoisie, and it feels more comfortable and finds that there are some benefits. That currently Eisenhower and Dulles do not permit American journalists to visit China actually indicates their admission that our policy has this one good point. Had everything been in a mess here, they would have let the journalists come so that they could write articles of condemnation. Eisenhower and Dulles are afraid that not all articles might be unfavorable but might say something good. The matter would then be hard to handle.

"A big old empire," "the sick man of East Asia," backward economy, backward culture, unhygienic, not skillful in ball games, not skillful in swimming, women with bound feet, men with pigtails, eunuchs, and the idea that China's moon was not that bright and the moon abroad was brighter were some of the terms used to describe China in the past. Anyway, there were many bad things. However, after six years of reform we have transformed China, and no one can deny our achievements.

The nucleus to lead our revolutionary cause is our party. When summarizing experiences, this Congress must first make the entire party more united. Up till June, our party had 10.73 million members. For these members we must conduct extensive education, persuasion and unity work so that they will play a more successful role as a nucleus among the people. Just the party alone is not sufficient. The party is a nucleus and it needs the masses. Ninety percent of all items of our concrete work, including industry, agriculture, commerce and culture and education, are not performed by party members but by non-members. Therefore, we must successfully rally the masses, rallying all those who can be rallied to work together. In the past, we had many shortcomings in rallying the entire party and those outside the party. We must conduct propaganda education during and after this Congress and successfully improve work in this aspect.

Internationally, we must rally all forces in the world which can be rallied. Primarily we must unite with the Soviet Union, fraternal parties,
It is an excellent thing. In the past, we did not have national political power, the victory of the two revolutions nor the achievements in construction. Now everything is different. Our foreign comrades respect us more.

What is our goal in rallying those inside and outside the party and the nation who can be rallied? It is to build a great socialist state. We may and should use the word "great" for a nation like ours. Our party is a great party; our people are a great people; our revolution is a great revolution; our construction cause is a great one. There is only one nation on earth with 600 million people, and we are it. The contempt felt by others in the past was understandable. It was because we had not contributed much. Even the few hundred thousand tons of steel a year were in the hands of the Japanese. During the 22 years of Kuomintang dictatorship under Chiang Kai-shek, there were only several ten thousand tons a year. We do not produce much now, but we have started. This year we have over 4 million tons; next year we will exceed 5 million tons. The second five-year plan will exceed 10 million tons; the third may possibly exceed 20 million tons. We must strive to realize this goal. Though there are almost 100 countries in the world, those producing more than 20 million tons of steel a year number only a few. Therefore, once this nation of ours is built, it will be a great socialist nation. We will completely change the backward condition of the past century, the situation of being held in contempt, the hard luck situation, and catch up with the most powerful capitalist nation in the world, the United States. It has only 170 million people, but our population is several times greater, our resources abundant, and our climatic conditions more or less the same. Therefore, it is possible to catch up. Should we catch up? We definitely should. What are you 600 million people doing? Are you sleeping? Is sleeping proper, or is working proper? If we say working is proper, then if their 170 million people produce 100 million tons of steel, should not your 600 million people produce 200 million or 300 million tons? If you cannot catch up, you have no excuse; you are not so glorious, nor very great. With a history of only 160 years, America produced only 4 million tons of steel 60 years ago, and we are 60 years behind. Given another 50 or 60 years, we should surpass it. This is an obligation. You have such a big population, such a vast territory and such rich resources, and what is more, it has been said that you are building socialism, which is supposed to be superior; if after much ado for 50 or 60 years you are still unable to overtake the United States, what a sorry figure you will cut! You should be read off the face of the earth. Therefore, to overtake the United States is not only possible, but absolutely necessary and obligatory. If we don't, we the Chinese nation will be letting the nations of the world down and we will not be making much of a contribution to mankind.

My second point concerns continuing the party tradition. This Congress must continue to develop our party's superior tradition in the aspects of ideology and work style and oppose subjectivism and sectarianism and also bureaucratism. I will not discuss bureaucratism today, but only subjectivism and sectarianism. These two things pop up again after having being swept away, and they must be swept away again.

Making a mistake means to make a subjective mistake and to have the wrong ideology. In the many articles criticizing Stalin's mistakes, this issue is not mentioned, or seldom mentioned. Why did Stalin make mistakes? On some of the issues, his subjective view was incompatible with objective reality. Many occurrences of this type appear constantly in our work. Subjectivism is not to start from objective reality, from practical feasibility, but from subjective desire. We must conform with and approximate as much as possible China's reality in the matters to be determined and discussed in the documents of this Congress. Meanwhile, we must, based on our past experiences, criticize those viewpoints incompatible with reality, criticizing and condemning such subjectivism. This task was proposed several years ago. Today, what we oppose is subjectivism in the socialist revolution and socialist construction. In the past during the democratic revolution, we were seriously damaged by subjectivism and severely punished, losing almost all our bases and over 90 percent of our revolutionary strength. Only now are we beginning to become aware. After the Yenan rectification movement, stressing investigation and study and starting from the practice, the issue was clarified. The universal truth of Marxism must be combined with the concrete practice of China's revolution otherwise it will not work. In other words, the unity of theory and practice is a most fundamental principle of Marxism. According to dialectical materialism, ideology must reflect objective reality and be verified in the objective practice. Only after proven will it become a truth; otherwise, it is not. There have been achievements in our work of the past several years, but the subjectivist defect exists everywhere. Not just at present; it will also occur in the future. Subjectivism will forever exist, 10,000 years from now, 100 million years from now. As long as mankind does not perish, it will always exist. With subjectivism, there will always be mistakes.

There is another thing which is called sectarianism. Every area has its own local general situation, every nation has its own national general situation, the earth has its own planetary general situation. Now we will not discuss what is beyond the earth, because communication lines have not been opened. If we should discover the presence of man on Mars or Venus, we would discuss the issue of uniting with them and building a united front with them. Now we are discussing the issue of unity in the party, in the country and in the world. Our principle is that regardless of who you are, foreign parties or foreign non-party members, as long as you are the least bit useful to the cause of world peace and human progress, we will unite with you. First we must unite with the several dozen communist parties and the Soviet Union. We have discussed and elaborated much on the mistakes which have occurred in the Soviet Union, as if they were insurmountable. Such a view is not proper. It is impossible for any nation not to make mistakes, let alone the fact that the Soviet Union is the first socialist nation in the world and, after such a long time, it is impossible for it not to have made mistakes. In regard to the mistakes which have occurred in the Soviet Union, such as those of Stalin, which kind were they? They were partial and temporary in essence. Though we hear that some of the mistakes lasted 20 years, they are temporary and partial and can be remedied. The main current, the major aspect and the majority of the Soviet Union are correct. Russia created Leninism and with the October Revolution became the first socialist nation. It built socialism, defeated fascism and became a powerful industrial nation. We can learn many things from it. Naturally, we must learn the advanced experiences, not the backward ones. Our slogan has always been to learn the advanced experiences of the Soviet Union. Who wants you to learn the backward experiences? There are some who, with their eyes closed, claim that even the wind broken by the Soviet people is fragrant. That is subjectivism, too. Even the Soviet people themselves say it is foul! Therefore, we must analyze. We once said that we must see both the good and the bad in Stalin. The major and numerous things of the Soviet Union are good and useful; some things are wrong. We also have some things which are not good. We must discard them ourselves. We do not want other countries to learn them from us. Nevertheless, bad things also constitute a sort of experience and produce a great effect. We had the likes of Ch'en Tu-hsiu, Li Li-san, Wang Ming, Chang Kuo-t'ao, Kao Kang and Jao Shu-shih and they were our teachers. We also have other teachers. Inside the country, the best teacher is Chiang Kai-shek. Once he teaches them, those whom we fail to convince are convinced. How does he teach them? He does so with machine guns, cannons and airplanes. We also have imperialism as a teacher. It educates our 600 million people. In the past 100 years, several imperialist powers oppressed and educated us. Therefore, the bad things have an educational value, a warning effect.

Opposing sectarianism deserves special discussion. We must unite with those who once struggled against us. He once quarreled with you and knocked you down. You got a beating and lost face. You were not that bad, yet he conferred a "title" on you, calling you an opportunist. If he was right, it was proper for him to beat you up. If you were really an opportunist, why shouldn't he beat you? Here I am talking about those who were wrong in beating and struggling against you. If they later on changed their attitude and admitted that they were wrong in beating you and calling you an opportunist, it should be the end of it. If some individuals refuse to admit that they were wrong, should you wait. You should. By unity we mean uniting with those who have differences with you, who look down upon you or show little respect for you, who have had a bone to pick with you or waged struggles with you and at whose hands who have suffered. As for those who agree with us, we have already united with them and this issue no longer exists. The issue is with those with whom we have not united. We mean those who disagree with us or whose shortcomings are great. Inside our party, for instance, many have joined the party in organization but not in ideology. Though they have not quarreled with you, as they have not joined the party ideologically, their performance will inevitably not be very proper, it may even be defective or they may even do some bad things. In regard to these people, we must unite with them, educate and help them. As I said once before, in regard to those with defects and mistakes, not only must we watch to see whether they correct themselves, but we must also help them. First is to watch and second is to help. If you only watch, standing still and not moving, what do you do? If you handle it successfully, it will be good. If not, you will suffer the consequences. It is a negative attitude, not a positive one. A Marxist must adopt a positive attitude, not just watching but also helping.

My third point concerns the election of the Central Committee. A while ago Comrade [Teng] Hsiao-p'ing said that the number of members of the Eighth Central Committee will be 150 to 170. The Seventh Central Committee had 77 members. This time, it is a little more than double. It is probably rather appropriate. After a few years, five for instance, we will expand it again which will probably be more beneficial. Currently, many of our useful talents were trained during the War of Resistance against Japan—the so-called "three-eight style" cadres. They constitute the important foundation of our current work and are indispensable. Nevertheless, their number is great. If we want to place them, the number of members of the Central Committee of this session will have to be increased to several hundred. Therefore, we will not consider placing them at this time. I hope the comrades will consider whether the number of 150 to 170 proposed by the Central Committee is appropriate or not and just how many are appropriate.

We must affirm that the previous session of the Central Committee did perform its work and that it did not abuse the trust of the Seventh National Party Congress. In 11 years these people correctly led China's democratic revolution, correctly led the socialist revolution and socialist construction without making any serious mistakes, struggled against all types of opportunist matters and erroneous things and overcame all kinds of factors detrimental to the revolution and construction. They had achievements and they included some comrades who made mistakes. Here, we are talking about the Central Committee as a whole. As for the individual comrades, we cannot assess them the same way. At the Seventh Congress, Wang Ming, for the purpose of meeting the situation, wrote a declaration admitting the accuracy of the Central Committee line, recognizing the political report of the Seventh Congress and indicating his willingness to abide by the decisions of the Congress. Nevertheless, when I talked with him subsequently, he reneged, forgetting what he had written. Thinking it over, he said the next day: I wrote something and admitted my mistakes. I said: If you admitted your mistakes at that time, but now you no longer admit them, you can withdraw your statement. But he did not withdraw it. Later on, at the plenary session of the Second Central Committee, we hoped that he would discuss his own mistakes, but he talked about other things instead, about how good we were. We said: You don't need to talk about those things. Just talk about the mistakes you made. He refused. He promised to write a self-examination after the meeting. But later he claimed that he was sick and could not exert himself mentally and that the moment he started writing, his illness would recur. Maybe he did it on purpose. It was hard to tell. He has been sick all along and cannot attend this Congress. Should we elect him? Should we elect Comrade Li Li-san? There are relatively more people who excuse Li Li-san than those who excuse Wang Ming. As stated by Comrade [Teng] Hsiao-p'ing, if we elect them, it will have the same significance as their election at the Seventh Congress. At the time of the Seventh Congress, many delegates were unwilling to elect them (not just Wang Ming, but also several others). At that time, we said that if we adopted such a policy we would be making a mistake. Why was not electing those who had made mistakes a mistake? Because it would have been handling affairs according to their method. Their method was that regardless of whether you had really made a mistake or not, the moment you were declared an opportunist you were rejected. If we followed their method, we would be following their line, i.e., the Wang Ming line or the Li Li-san line. We refused to do so. We refused to follow the Wang Ming line or the Li Li-san line. That is how they would handle inner-party relations. They rejected all those who had once made mistakes, struggled against them or called them opportunists. They claimed that they themselves were 100 percent bolshevik. Upon subsequent investigation we found that they were 100 percent opportunists, while we who were called "opportunists" by them possessed some Marxism, more or less.

Here, the most basic factor is that they are not isolated individuals, but represent a rather large portion of the petty bourgeoisie. China is a country with a large petty bourgeoisie, and a rather large portion of it is unstable. Take the well-to-do middle peasants, for instance. In any revolution, they always vacillate and are not firm, becoming insane when happy but depressed when pessimistic. Their eyes are glued to their little bits of assets, nothing more than one or two domestic animals, a large cart and some 10 odd mou of land. They worry about profits and loss and are afraid to lose their possessions. They are different from poor peasants.
China's poor peasants amount to 50 percent in the North and 70 percent in the South. In terms of its makeup, our party basically consists of workers and poor peasants, i.e., proletarians and semi-proletarians. The semi-proletariat also belongs to the petty bourgeoisie, but its stability is much better than the middle peasantry. Our party has also recruited some of the intellectuals. Among our membership of over 10 million, there are approximately 1 million large, medium and small intellectuals. One cannot say that these 1 million intellectuals represent imperialism, the landowner class, the bureaucratic bourgeoisie, or the national bourgeoisie.
It is more appropriate to include them in the petty bourgeoisie. Which part of the petty bourgeoisie do they represent? They represent that part of the urban and rural petty bourgeoisie which has relatively more means of production, such as the well-to-do middle peasants. These intellectual party members are afraid of their own shadows, vacillate constantly and suffer seriously from subjectivism and not a little from sectarianism.
What did we wish to demonstrate in electing the two representative figures of the Wang Ming and the Li Li-san lines? It was to demonstrate that we made a distinction between those making ideological mistakes and the counterrevolutionaries and schismatics (such as Ch'en Tu-hsiu, Chang Kuo-t'ao, Kao Kang and Jao Shu-shih). Advocating subjectivism and sectarianism, the former openly declare battle, sound the gong and beat the drum and try to convince others with their own political programs. Wang Ming had a political program and so did Li Li-san. Of course, Ch'en Tu-hsiu also had a political program, but he promoted Trotsky-ism and schisms and pursued anti-party activities outside the party. Chang Kuo-t'ao promoted conspiracies and schisms and defected to the Kuomintang. Therefore, the issue of Wang Ming and Li Li-san was not just an issue of them as individuals. What was more important was its social factor. The reflection of this social factor is that a considerable number in the party will vacillate at a crucial moment. Such vacillation is opportunism. Opportunism means doing whatever is beneficial without any set principle, bylaw or direction. An opportunist is one way today and another way tomorrow. Wang Ming, for instance, was this way. He was a radical "leftwing" first, but a radical rightwing later.

At the Seventh Congress I convinced the comrades to elect Wang Ming and Li Li-san. Then in the 11 years since, have we suffered any loss? None at all. Our revolution did not fail and its success was not delayed even in terms of months just because we elected them.

Did those making mistakes receive encouragement with their election? If those making mistakes can become members of the Central Committee, then we can all make mistakes because we will have the chance to become Central Committee members anyway. Will this happen? It will not. Among our 70 odd Central Committee members, none of them purposely made mistakes in order to become a member. Among those who are not Central Committee members, whether before, during, or after the "three-eight work style," will they imitate Wang Ming and Li Li-san and also promote two lines, resulting in four lines, in order to become members of the Central Committee? No one will do so. On the contrary, forewarned by the mistakes of Wang Ming and Li Li-san, they will be more careful.

Then, what about the saying some time ago that "It is better to join the revolution late than early; it is better not to join the revolution than join." If they are elected, will the issue that mistakes are better than accuracy and that major mistakes are better than minor ones arise in the party? If Wang Ming and Li Li-san who made line mistakes are elected as Central Committee members, those who are correct or who have only made minor mistakes must yield two seats to them. Will this not be the most unfair arrangement in the world? In this respect, it is most unfair. That those who are correct or who have only made minor mistakes must yield their seats to those who have made major mistakes is obviously unfair. If we look at it this way, we must admit that mistakes are better than accuracy and major mistakes are better than minor ones. However, in another respect it is not so. Their line errors are well-known in the whole nation.
and throughout the whole world. We would be electing them because they are well-known. What can you do? You, who have not made mistakes or who have only made minor ones are not as well-known. In our nation with a broad petty bourgeoisie, they are the banners. If we elect them, many people will say, the Communist Party still waits for them; it would rather give them two seats to afford them the chance to rectify themselves. Whether they will rectify themselves is another issue, which is a minor one and concerns only the two individuals themselves. The issue is that our society has such a large petty bourgeoisie, our party has so many unstable petty bourgeois elements, and there are so many vacillating intellectuals and they want to see examples. When they see that their two banners are still there, they feel relieved, they can sleep and they are happy. If you take away the two banners, they will become alarmed. Therefore, it is not the issue of whether Wang Ming and Li Li-san will reform. Whether they reform or not is unimportant. What is important is the 1 million petty bourgeois elements in the party, especially the intellectuals who are subject to vacillation. They want to see our attitude toward Wang Ming and Li Li-san. Similar to our handling of the rich peasants in land reform, when we did not touch the rich peasants, the middle peasants felt relieved. If our Eighth Congress adopts the same attitude at the Seventh Congress toward these two, then our party will reap a benefit, a kind of advantage. It will make it relatively easier to reform the broad petty bourgeoisie in the nation. It will have an effect in the world. Very few foreign countries adopt our attitude toward those who have made mistakes. One can say that there are none.

The preliminary meeting of this Congress, starting now, will last only 10 odd days, but if we arrange it properly, it is entirely possible to complete the preparatory work. We believe that this Congress will be successful—the caliber of the delegates will make it successful. But we must be cautious and attentive and all must exert themselves.
SPEECH AT THE SECOND PLENARY SESSION OF THE EIGHTH CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF CHINA (15 NOVEMBER 1956)

[Excerpts] I will discuss four issues: The economy, the international situation, Sino-Soviet relations and great democracy and small democracy.

II

The international situation as a whole is good. What do a few imperialists amount to? Even several dozens more will not matter.

Currently, two areas have problems, Eastern Europe and the Middle East. Trouble started in Poland and Hungary, and England and France launched an armed invasion of Egypt. I feel that all these bad things are good. According to a Marxist, a bad thing has a dual essence—bad and good. Seeing the word "bad" before the word "thing," many people think that it is only bad. We say that there is another significance and that it is also a good thing. This is the meaning of the saying that "Failure is the mother of success." Under certain conditions, all failures, disastrous happenings and mistakes will produce good results. Be it Poland or Hungary, since there is fire, it will burn. Is it better for it to burn or not to burn? Fire cannot be wrapped up in paper. Now that it has begun to burn, it is good. Hungary has many counterrevolutionaries; now they will be exposed. The Hungarian incident is a lesson to the comrades of the Soviet Union and of China as well as to the Hungarian people. The emergence of Beria was a shock. How could a Beria emerge in a socialist country? The emergence of Kao Kang was another big shock. We must learn our lessons from such happenings. They are part of the whole scheme and always possible.

In the future, when all the imperialists in the world have been knocked down and classes have vanished, will there still be revolution? I think there will. The social system will still have to be reformed, and the word "revolution" will still have to be used. Naturally, the essence of revolution by that time will be different from revolution in the era of the class struggle. At that time there will still be contradictions between production relations and productive forces and between the superstructure and the economic foundation. When production relations are not handled successfully, they must be overthrown. When the superstructure (including ideology and public opinion) protects production relations which are unpopular, the people will reform it. The superstructure is also a sort of social relations. It is built on the economic foundation. The so-called economic foundation is production relations, mainly the ownership system. Productive forces are the most revolutionary factor. When productive forces develop, there will always be revolution. Productive forces include two items, man and tools. Tools are created by man. Tools want to revolutionize. They will express themselves through man, through the laborer, destroying the old production relations and the old social relations. "A gentleman will use his mouth rather than his hands." The best means is to use one's mouth. When friendly words are rejected, one has to resort to force. What should one do when there is no weapon? The laborer has tools in his hands. If he has no tools, he can use stones. When even stones are not available, he can use his two fists.

Our state organs are those of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Take our courts, for instance. They are there to deal with the counterrevolution. But not exclusively. They must also handle the many internal disputes among the people. It looks as if courts will be indispensable even 10,000 years from now. After the extinction of classes, there will still be the contradictions between the advanced and the backward, struggles among individuals, quarrels and all kinds of troubles. Therefore, how can we not have courts? However, the essence of the struggles will have changed; it will be different from the class struggle. The essence of the courts will also have changed. By that time, the superstructure may have problems. People like us, for instance, may make mistakes. Losing the struggle, we may be ousted, and a Gomulka or Jao Shu-shih may come into power. Are you saying that nothing like this will happen? I think it is possible even 1,000 years, 10,000 years, from now.

III

Everything in the world is a unity of opposites. The unity of opposites means the unity of things which are qualitatively different and opposed to each other. Water, for instance, is a combination of the elements of hydrogen and oxygen. There can be no water if either element is missing. I hear that there are now over 1 million named chemical compounds and an unknown number of unnamed ones. Chemical compounds are the unity of opposites of qualitatively different things. This is also true with things in society. The central and the local governments are the unity of opposites; this department and that department are also the unity of opposites.

Two countries are also the unity of opposites. Both China and the Soviet Union are socialist. Are there any differences? There are. The races are different. The October Revolution occurred 39 years ago, but it has only been seven years since we gained national political power. As for our undertakings, there are many differences. Our agricultural collectivization, for instance, went through several stages which were different from theirs, our policy on capitalists is different from theirs, our market price policy is different from theirs, our handling of the relations among agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry is different from theirs and our systems in the army and in the party are also different from theirs. We once told them, We disagree with what you do; we disapprove of some of your ways.

Some comrades fail to follow dialectics or to analyze. They think all things Soviet are good and arbitrarily copy them. Actually, be they things Chinese or things foreign, we should analyze them; they contain both the good and the bad. The work of a province is also thus; there are achievements and shortcomings. This applies to us as individuals. There are always two points, the superiorities and the defects, not just one point. The one-point theory has been in existence since ancient times, and so has the two-point theory. It is metaphysics and dialectics. China's ancients said, Negative and positive become The Way. It is impossible to have only the negative without the positive, or vice versa. It is the ancient two-point theory. Metaphysics is the one-point theory. Currently, a considerable number of comrades cannot change their one-point theory. Looking at issues onesidedly, they feel that all things Soviet are good and they copy everything, including things which should not be copied. We must correct those which should not be copied and which are not suitable to this land of ours.

Here, I will discuss the issue of "Having illicit relations with foreign countries." Do we have such people in China who pass information to foreigners behind the back of the Central Committee? I think we do. Kao Kang, for instance, was one. It has been proved by many facts. At the Central Committee meeting of 24 December 1953 to expose Kao Kang, I announced that there were two headquarters in the city of Peking. One belonged to us and stirred up an open wind and lit an open fire. The other was the underground one and it too stirred up a sort of wind and lit a sort of fire, which I call a sinister wind and a sinister fire. As stated by the ancient Lin Tai-yu, if it is not the east wind prevailing over the west wind, it would be the west wind prevailing over the east wind. As for now, if it is not the positive wind and positive fire prevailing over the negative wind and the negative fire, it is the negative wind and the negative fire prevailing over the positive wind and the positive fire. The purpose of blowing negative wind and lighting negative fire is to prevail over the positive wind and extinguish the positive fire and knock down a large group of people.

There are those among our high- and middle-level cadres and individuals (not many) who have illicit relations with foreign countries. This is not desirable. I hope the comrades will clarify the issue in the party organizations and committees and at the provincial, municipal, and autonomous region party committee levels so that they will stop doing such things.
The Party Central Committee has told them many times about the Soviet things which we do not approve. Some of the problems have not been discussed, but they will be discussed in the future. The discussions must be conducted through the Central Committee. As for information, it must not be transmitted. It will serve no purpose but only be detrimental. It will damage the relations between the two parties and between the two nations. Those who do such things find it awkward for themselves. Since you act behind the party's back, you will always feel guilty. If those who have transmitted information come out and admit, that will be the end of it. If not, there will be an investigation, and once uncovered, there will be appropriate punishment.

I wish to discuss the 20th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party. I feel that there are two "swords": One is Lenin and the other is Stalin. The sword of Stalin has now been discarded by the Russians. Gomulka and some people in Hungary have picked it up against the Soviet Union, so-called Stalinism. The communist parties of many European nations also criticize the Soviet Union and the leader is Togliatti. Imperialism also uses this sword to kill people. Dulles also wielded it for a while. This sword was not loaned out but discarded. China has not discarded it. First, we protect Stalin and, second, we at the same time criticize his mistakes and we have written the article "On the Historical Experience of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat." Unlike some people who have tried to defame and destroy Stalin, we are acting in accordance with objective reality.

Have the Soviet leaders also discarded a part of Lenin as a knife? I think they have discarded quite a bit of it. Is the October Revolution still efficacious? Can it still serve as a model for various nations? Khrushchev said in his report at the 20th Soviet Party Congress that political power can be gained by means of the parliament, indicating that it is no longer necessary for the various nations to follow the example of the October Revolution. Once this door is opened, Leninism is basically discarded.

The Leninist theory is a development of Marxism. In what aspects is it a development of Marxism? First, it is a development in world philosophy, the materialist and dialectical aspect. Next, it is a development in the aspect of revolutionary theory and revolutionary strategy, especially on the issues of class struggle, the dictatorship of the proletariat and the proletarian political party. Lenin also had a theory on socialist construction. There is construction in revolution. Beginning from the October Revolution of 1917, he already had seven years of practice which Marx did not. What we study then are these fundamental principles of Marxism-Leninism.

In the democratic revolution and the socialist revolution, we always mobilized the masses to wage class struggle and educated them in struggle. We learned to wage class struggle from the October Revolution. In the October Revolution, the masses, whether in the cities or villages, were fully mobilized to launch class struggle. Those now being sent by the Soviet Union to the various nations as experts were only infants or teenagers at the time of the October Revolution; many of them have forgotten it. The comrades of some countries say that China's mass line is not correct and that they like to study the gift-of-grace viewpoint. They have no way to study. Anyway, ours are the five principles of peaceful coexistence, mutual nonintervention in internal affairs and mutual non-aggression. We do not attempt to be the leader of any other nation. We lead only one, the People's Republic of China.

The fundamental problem of some Eastern European countries is their failure to wage class struggle, eliminate the many counterrevolutionaries, train the proletariat in the class struggle, and distinguish between the enemy and ourselves, right and wrong and idealism and materialism. And now, they have made their own bed and burnt their own brows.

How much capital do you have? Merely a Lenin and a Stalin. You have thrown away Stalin and most of Lenin. You no longer have Lenin's legs. Maybe you still have his head. Maybe you have chopped off one of his hands. We want to study Marxism-Leninism and the October Revolution. Marx and Lenin both wrote about many things. We have learned from the masses to rely on them and to trod the mass line.

Not to rely on the masses in waging class struggle and not to make a clear distinction between ourselves and the enemy would be very dangerous.
A DIALECTICAL APPROACH TO INNER-PARTY UNITY (18 NOVEMBER 1957)

--Excerpts from a speech at the Moscow meeting of representatives of Communist and Workers' Parties

[Text] I wish to discuss the problem of method on the unity issue. I feel that in regard to comrades, no matter who they are, as long as they are not hostile or destructive we should adopt the attitude of unity. We should adopt the method of dialectics toward them, not the method of metaphysics. What is the dialectical method? It is to analyze everything, admit that man will always make mistakes and refrain from negating everything just because a person has made mistakes. Lenin once said that there was no one in the world who had not made mistakes. Everyone needs the support of others. A hero needs three assistants; a fence needs three posts. Though the lotus blossom is pretty, it needs the support of the green leaves. It is a Chinese proverb. China has another proverb: Three stinking cobbler make one Chu-ko Liang. One Chu-ko Liang is incomplete and always defective. Just look at our 12-nation declaration. After the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th drafts, the revisions of the wording have still not been completed. I feel that to claim to be all-wise and all-powerful like God is improper. Therefore, what should be our attitude toward those comrades who have made mistakes? We should analyze and adopt the dialectical method, not the metaphysical method. Our party once became entrapped in metaphysics—dogmatism, destroying completely those whom it did not like. Subsequently, we criticized dogmatism and gradually learned some dialectics. The basic viewpoint of dialectics is the unity of opposites. After recognizing this viewpoint, what do we do with a comrade who has made mistakes? First we must struggle against him and thoroughly rid him of his erroneous thinking. Second, we must help him. First is struggle and second is help. With good intentions we should help him to correct his mistakes so that he will have a way out.

It is different when it comes to another type of people. With people like Trotsky and China's Ch' en Tu-hsiu, Chang Kuo-t' ao, and Kao Kang it was impossible to adopt an attitude of help because they were irremediable.
Then there were also those like Hitler, Chiang Kai-shek and the Czar. They were also irremediable, and could only be knocked down because as far as we were concerned they were absolutely repellent. In this respect, they had no dual essence, only a single one. In the final analysis, it is the same with the imperialist and capitalist systems, and they will eventually be replaced by the socialist system. It is the same with ideology. We must replace idealism with materialism and theism with atheism. This is in terms of strategy. Tactically it is different and there must be compromise. Did we not compromise with the Americans on the 38th parallel? Did we not compromise with the French on Vietnam?

In each tactical stage, we must be skillful in both struggle and compromise. Now we will return to the comrade relationship. I suggest that, whenever there is any misunderstanding between comrades, they must hold discussions. Some people seem to feel that once joining the communist party, everyone becomes a saint without any differences or misunderstandings. They are unable to analyze. Like a piece of iron plate, uniform and even and no discussion is necessary. It seems that, once having joined the communist party, a person has to be a 100 percent Marxist. Actually, there are all kinds of Marxists: There are 100 percent, 90 percent, 80 percent, 70 percent, 60 percent and 50 percent Marxists, and some are only 10 or 20 percent. Can we not hold a conversation of two or several persons in a small room? Can we not start from unity and discuss in the spirit of help? Naturally, it will not be a discussion with imperialism (we also will hold discussions with imperialism), but one inside the communist party. Let me give an example. Are we not holding a discussion this time among 12 nations? Is it not a discussion among more than 60 parties? Actually, we are holding discussions. In other words, under the principle of not damaging Marxism-Leninism, we must accept some of the opinions of others which are acceptable and relinquish some of our own opinions which can be relinquished. Thus, we have two hands: Toward the comrades who have made mistakes, we struggle against them with one hand and discuss unity with them with the other. The goal of struggle is to adhere to Marxist principles. It is the fundamental essence, involving one hand. With the other hand, we discuss unity. The goal of unity is to afford the wrongdoer a way out and compromise with him. It is flexibility. The unity of the fundamental essence and flexibility is a Marxist-Leninist principle. It is a sort of unity of opposites.

Any kind of world, especially class society, naturally, is always filled with contradictions. Some people say that we can "find" the contradictions in a socialist society. I think this theory is not correct. It is not a question of finding or not finding the contradictions. Contradictions exist everywhere. There is no place where contradictions do not exist, nor one individual who cannot be analyzed. If we admit that an individual cannot be analyzed, it will be metaphysics. Just look at the atom. It is full of the unity of contradictions, the opposite unity of atomic nucleus and the electrons, the opposite unity of proton and neutron in the nucleus, the proton and anti-proton in the proton and the neutron and anti-neutron in the neutron. In sum, the unity of opposites is found everywhere. We must extensively propagate the concept of the unity of opposites, dialectics. I say that dialectics must be brought to the broad masses of the people from the small circle of philosophers. I suggest that this issue be discussed at the party politburo and the party central committee plenary sessions of the various nations and at the local party committees of all levels. Actually, our branch secretary understands dialectics. When preparing to make a report at the branch mass meeting, he often writes down two points in his little notebook—the superiorities and the shortcomings. Dividing one into two is a universal phenomenon which is dialectics.
