Mentoring (in the Army) is the proactive development of each subordinate through observing, assessing, coaching, teaching, developmental counseling, and evaluating that results in people being treated with fairness and equal opportunity. Mentoring is an inclusive process (not an exclusive one) for everyone under a leader's charge.

Mentorship. Military officership is a profession. It transcends an occupation through its high order of expertise, corporate nature, and special social trust. In any profession, there is a complex process of education, practice, acculturation, and adherence to standards that sustains the essence of the profession from generation to generation. Periodically within The Army changes in the roles and mission, the nature of the force, and the strategic environment or the generational change of the guard in the officer corps raises questions about the status of the profession and the process by which the new generation is assimilated. One traditional and powerful means of sustaining and enhancing the profession is senior leader mentoring. The special theme of mentorship focuses USAWC (U.S. Army War College) faculty and students on the role and process of senior leader mentorship in sustaining and advancing the profession of arms.

Mentoring is a special theme at the U.S. Army War College. Compiled in support of this theme, the following bibliography reflects materials available in the Army War College Library collection.

The materials may be available in hard copy, in paid subscription databases, or on the Internet. For your convenience we have added our call numbers at the end of each book and document entry if the materials are in hard copy. Please keep in mind that call numbers may vary from library to library.

This bibliography is also available on the Internet through our Library's home page <http://carlisle-www.army.mil/library/>.

A special thank you to Colonel Gregg Martin of the Department of Command, Leadership, and Management for his interest and suggestions for the bibliography.
