This bibliography is Volume One of two volumes of selective unclassified and unlimited citations entitled Bibliography of Bibliographies in the Defense Documentation Center collection.

It contains 649 citations processed into the Defense Documentation Center's data bank between January 1968 and January 1978.

These volumes supplement three volumes of unclassified citations, AD-677 015, DDC-TAS-68-31; AD-677 025, DDC-TAS-68-38; and AD-677 035, DDC-TAS-68-44, dated September 1968. These two volumes also supersede AD-752 150, DDC-TAS-72-52-I; AD-752 160, DDC-TAS-72-52-II, dated November 1972; AD-780 700, DDC-TAS-74-20, dated May 1974 and AD-A006 700, DDC-TAS-75-4, dated March 1975.

The citations are arranged in six COSATI Subject Categories as listed in the Table of Contents. Citations arranged in numerical descending sequence. Computer-generated indexes of Corporate Author-Monitoring Agency, Subject, Title and Personal Author are provided.

As new aircraft are being developed, greater demands are being placed on their information processing systems to automate more mission functions. The computer software required to accomplish this task, however, continues to plague the Air Force in the problem areas of risk, visibility, and cost. Existing avionics software is inadequately structured, documented and tested. It remains inflexible (incapable of easy changes for different missions) and nontransferable (incapable of being used by several aircraft). This volume, the last of five, is a bibliography of publications relating to the OSC effort. It includes a list of titles, abstracts, and comments concerning the articles. Entries are arranged alphabetically by title. (U)

The report presents a general review of the research and development of flight simulators and related areas sponsored by military and other government agencies since 1949. The use of simulators for flight training is emphasized. The report does not consider mathematical models and space flight simulators. The topics include: (1) Visual and Motion Simulation, (2) Transfer of Training, (3) Utilization and Evaluation, and (4) Computers. An annotated bibliography of unclassified technical reports reviewed is included for each of the topics. The Defense Documentation Center accession number of each report is provided to facilitate the acquisition of microfilm copies of desired documents by United States military and other government agencies. The United States Air Force (USAF) annually spends millions of dolalrs for the replacement or repair of aircraft components damaged by bird-aircraft collisions. Since March 1969, the Air Force has had an active research and development program at the Air Force Weapons Laboratory (AFWL) to reduce the bird-aircraft strike hazard. The report reviews those Technical Notes (TNs) and Technical Reports (TRs) that have been published as a result of the research effort. (Author) (U)

Current criteria and design practices for aircraft structures were found not to be applicable to composite structures because they 1) do not consider the critical interaction of low strain and failure material with structural complexity, 2) do not consider material, design.concept, manufacturing methods, and load/environment variabil-ity, and 3) because they assume that residual strength and lifetime allowables are translated from the material level to the component level, which does not apply to composites. It is recommended that near-term composite designs take into account realistic random-load and environment simulation, fleet size, reliability goals, structural complexity, and scaling from test specifications to component level. The report includes statistical design data and analysis techniques for sizing laminates, joints, and cutouts. (R.B.-PL) (U)

An expanding interest at the Naval Postgraduate School, Monterey, California, in research work on aircraft side-arm control sticks has necessitated the determination of the previous and ongoing projects involved with the development of side-arm control sticks. This paper presents a survey of the English language literature dealing with aircraft control sticks over the period of 1936 to 1971. The result of the survey is an abstracted bibliograph of significant literature related to the design and testing of aircraft control sticks and a guide to the literature. (Author) (U)

A survey was conducted to compile and annotate the existing wind loads data applicable to ocean facilities structures, including ships, moored systems and offshore structures. After a survey of sources available at the David W. Taylor Naval Ship Research and Development Center (DTNSRDC), a bibliography on wind loads data was prepared. Data item summary sheets are given for representative wind loads data, including typical analytical methods and representative experimental methods. The survey revealed that there is a lack of wind loads data on offshore structures and that a handbook on the wind loads on ocean facilities structures is needed for ocean engineering applications. This handbook could be part of a handbook on environmental forces which could include wind, wave and current loads on ocean structures. (Author) (U)

A major concern of various Codes at the Naval Weapons Center and the Naval Electronics Laboratory Center has been the effect of weather on the operation of naval electro-optical systems. A literature search was undertaken to study and evaluate research efforts and the state of the art of various aspects of the problem. The areas of interest included: Measurement of visibility at sea; Methods for accurately determining visibility at sea; Cloud free lines of sight (CFLOS); Methods for extending visibility measurements made in the visible to the infrared; Lidar measurements of visibility; Precipitation data over oceans; and Sources of Visibility Data. An annotated bibliography of this search was compiled and is presented alphabetically by author. The source materials are listed separately. (U)

Characteristics of Magnetospheric Substorms and Their Effects upon Spacecraft: A Selected Bibliography, (U)

UNCLASSIFIED REPORT

DESCRIPTORS: *Magnetosphere, *Magnetic storms, *Synchronous satellites, *Bibliographies, Space environments, Charged particles, Radiation effects, Atmospheric electricity (U)

During the past 15 years many different NASA-launched satellites in earth orbit and deep space have collected an enormous amount of data which has been used to develop detailed models of the earth's magnetic field and plasma environment. Several of the spacecraft in the outer magnetosphere have experienced anomalous behavior and sometimes failures which, in most cases, were unexplained. Recently, some of these unwanted space events have been correlated with magnetospheric substorms. In an effort to shed more light on this problem and to facilitate research in this area the authors have prepared this bibliography. It is divided into two parts: Characteristics of magnetospheric substorms, and effects upon spacecraft. This material provides scientists and engineers a present day description of the substorm environment and consequences upon synchronous satellites. The space environment articles were limited to post- 1967 papers to provide the latest information on the fast developing definition of magnetospheric substorm phenomena. (U)

The report was compiled as Volume 2 in a series of bibliographies with abstracts on selected topics in the literature on upper atmospheric phenomena in the inner regions of the polar caps. In general, the references begin with those on activities during the International Geophysical Year and continue with articles published through the year 1971. References are grouped under sixteen subject headings that cover the geomagnetic field, electric field, upper atmospheric current systems, earth currents, magnetic storms, polar and auroral substorms, polar and auroral absorption, magnetosphere, hydromagnetic waves, micropulsations and other pulsations, traveling waves, nuclear-burst effects, and instrumentation and measurement systems for studying these phenomena. The Polar Cap Bibliography was compiled with the objective of providing information on the nature and extent of past and current polar cap research in the field of upper atmosphere phenomenology. The bibliography lists references to the literature on upper atmospheric phenomena in the polar caps grouped by subject with introductory summaries. The introductory summaries generally cover briefly the contents of the literature referenced for each subject. Sixty-eight subjects are covered with a total of 2,711 references in 385 pages, of which 134 pages contain the text of the introductory summaries. The eight major sections bear subject headings as follows: (1) Surveys and Summaries; (2) Atmospheric Structure; (3) Energy Inputs; (4) Energy Outputs; (5)Disturbance Phenomena; (6) Ionosphere; (7) Geophysical Effects Peculiar to Polar Cap Regions; and (8) Instrumentation and Measurement Systems. The study was designed to provide estimates of the costs of disruptions (delays, diversions, and cancellations) of aircraft arrivals (landings) associated with a number of Category II and III weather situations, with the emphasis on fog situations, at some of the major air carrier airports in the United States. As such they would be measures of the potential economic benefits the airport users would realize if the adverse effects of these weather situations on aircraft landings were completely eliminated by weather modification and/or electronic and other approach and landing aids. Specifically, the estimates which were developed and are shown in this part of the report are of the costs of disruptions (delays, diversions, and cancellations) of scheduled arrivals (landings) of aircraft of first and second level United States certificated route air carriers in domestic and international passenger service. This part of the report also includes a narrative discussion of the qualifications and limitations of the estimates, conclusions, and a bibliography. (Author) (U)

The abstracted bibliography has been compiled from the files of the Meteorological and Geoastrophysical Abstracts Office of the American Meteorological Society (AMS) and from files of Government libraries in the Washington, D.C., area. Its purpose is to provide the participants of CICAR with a reasonably comprehensive and timely review of the published literature in physical/chemical oceanography and in meteorology/climatology concerned with the Caribbean Sea, Gulf of Mexico, Greater and Lesser Antilles Regions, and the adjacent coastal areas of North, Central, and South America. Articles dealing with weather phenomena outside of this geographical region, but influencing the atmosphere within the area, have been included occasionally. Similarly, references to oceanographic region, but influencing the atmosphere within the area, have been included occasionally. Similarly, references to oceanographic cruise data taken outside of but close to this area were also sometimes included. (Author) (U)

For example, a source listed in the National Agricultural Library, was not located at the time of search in the Atmospheric Sciences Library or the Library of Congress but it may be in the Naval Oceanographic Office Library which is lower on the preferential list. Map scales are presented in the abstracts. In the absence of printed information the scales have been determined by a natural scale indicator. (Author) (U)

IDENTIFIERS: PLASMAPAUSE (U)

Magnetospheric convection, which implies the existence of large-scale electric fields, appears to be the dominant process for the acceleration and injection of moderately energetic plasma into the magnetosphere. The aurora, the radiation belts, and the 'thermal' plasma beyond the plasmapause are directly controlled by the convection induced by the solar wind. The existence of the plasmapause and its variations with time can be understood in terms of convection, and, even within the plasmapause, the radiation belts and the ionospheric plasma are strongly affected by tidally induced convection and the more random convection associated with DP1 and DP2 geomagnetic activity. The basic features of convection are discussed briefly in this review. Direct and indirect observations that provide evidence for the existence of convection are described, and the expected nature of the solar-wind-induced convection in the outer magnetosphere is discussed at some length. A fairly complete bibliography concerning the theory of magnetospheric convection is provided in the references. (Author) (U)

UNCLASSIFIED REPORT

DESCRIPTORS: (*CLIMATE, BIBLIOGRAPHIES), ABSTRACTS, WEATHER STATIONS, AIR FORCE PERSONNEL, WEATHER, SOURCES, METEOROLOGICAL CHARTS (U)

The listing of climatological bibliographies for various countries is presented to furnish a ready reference to those Air Weather Service personnel whose duties or interests may involve an investigation of weather conditions of specific areas throughout the World. Each bibliography is listed with both its associated AD number and its Weather Bureau designation. These publications were compiled by the Foreign Area Section, Office of Climatology, of the U.S. Weather Bureau (now ESSA). Most of these bibliographies were sponsored (contracted) by the Air Weather Service through its Climatic Center (now USAF ETAC). Two distinct types of bibliographies are included: (1) a listing of climatic references and (2) a listing of Climatic Maps. All references included within the bibliographies have been abstracted to furnish the reader a quick resume of the contents therein. The source of each publication is noted. (Author) (U)

IDENTIFIERS: COMPUTERIZED SIMULATION (U)

The document contains a selective bibliography, with informative abstracts of papers related to the numerical simulation of cloud dynamics, including significant works from the Russian and Chinese. Some representative works have been included that model clouds as idealized bubbles or plumes. However, the emphasis is on models involving the solution of hydrodynamic and thermodynamic equations by numerical methods using a digital computer. Cloud microphysics, laboratory studies of convection, and field observations are in general excluded. Several works are listed primarily for their historical interest, including those that introduce the basic thermodynamic equations of water in clouds, the term 'pseudo-adiabatic,' the parcel and slice methods of analysis, and the concept of entrainment. Clear air turbulence encounters can occur unexpectedly without any visual evidence or warning. As operations of higher altitude aircraft increase, the phenomenon is encountered more often. Clear air turbulence is defined as 'all turbulence in the free atmosphere of interest in aerospace operations that is not in or adjacent to visible convective activity (this includes turbulence found in cirrus clouds not in or adjacent to visible convective activity).' This bibliography consists of 578 references to technical reports, articles in periodicals, and books published during the past 17 years. This report contains an annotation of published reports dealing with the use of audio-visual media for proficiency testing. Reports included discuss investigation of audio-visual administrations of standardized printed tests as well as motion picture filmed tests assessing job knowledge and skill. Reports dealing with the use of audio-visual media in teaching were not included, though references to several bibliographies dealing with the use of motion pictures in education are listed. The majority of the investigations of motion picture filmed tests were done between 1945 and 1958. Most of the more recent research is limited to the audio-visual display of printed tests during test administration. Although the published results of the reviewed reports vary from extremely positive to quite negative, the general finding of this review stresses the paucity of thorough investigations using the audio-visual medium in proficiency testing. The second section contains a discussion of the current policy with respect to obtaining contract services. In the third section, some of the other important aspects that must be considered in addition to policy are discussed. These include Congressional concerns, legal issues, etc. Section IV highlights DoD's experiences concerning contract services. Systems used to report information concerning service contracts are discussed in the fifth section. Appendices provide: a glossary, a discussion of the laws relating to contracting-out for services, a chronology of important decisions concerning the legal aspects of contract services, and an annotated bibliography. IDENTIFIERS: *Low aptitude personnel, 100000 project, New standards men, Training management, WUAFHRL44990741, PE62703F (U)

This report summarizes the manpower research literature describing the performance, training, and utilization of personnel entering the armed forces under reduced physical and mental standards adopted in 1966. Up to 100,000 men were inducted each year under these new standards during the 1966 through 1973 time period. Most of these accessions qualified for military service under the reduced mental standards. The first section of the bibliography summarizes research in each of the major areas of investigation, and assesses the contribution to the state-of-the-art and the implications of this resource for management. The second section provides summaries of the manpower research literature dealing with low-aptitude personnel. The general findings in the studies described are that low-aptitude accessions are trainable and perform successfully in a limited number of career areas. However, they require more time to complete training and have slightly higher attrition rates than higher aptitude accessions. (U)

Aerospace engineers and designers have shown an interest in the effect of rapid heating on the properties of materials. In response to this interest, a collection of relevant publications has been compiled in this bibliography report. This bibiography, which is annotated by descriptors, contains references to over 350 documents published from 1948 to 1976. The bibliographic citations are arranged in chronological order and in alphabetical order by last names of first authors and by year of publication. A continuous numbering system is used throughout the bibliography, and accession numbers are employed as locators in all of the indexes. (Author) (U)

The four sections include: 1 An annotated bibliography about seating, console, and workplace designs. Each relevant publication is summarized to reflect a category, author, title, methodology, rationale, significant results, conclusions, and recommendations; 2 Integration of the seat, console, and workplace design. The detailed aspects of these components and their relationship to each other in making up the workplace are discussed; 3 A workplace-accommodated percentage evaluation model. A model and preliminary results are presented to show the percentage excluded from a seat/console design, given the percentage excluded based on individual dimensions; and 4 Reach profiles for restrained and unrestrained males and females. Reach envelope data and new methodologies for collecting data are presented, and are compared with existing reach data. (U)

This report contains a compilation of published reports dealing with assessment centers and assessment center research. The reports include general information articles, reports on the implementation of an assessment center, research studies to determine the best method of arriving at a single overall evaluation of managerial potential from assessment center data, and reports on validities of assessment center evaluations. Not included are the many related studies on individual assessment techniques; such as in-basket exercises or leaderless group discussions since they have been used independently of assessment centers. The general finding, in the reports described, is that assessment center evaluations are more predictive of future management success than the traditional evaluations based on supervisor's reports, paper-and-pencil tests, and interviews. Technical decisions at the municipal level of government are resolved more and more frequently by general techniques rather than local experience. Operations research has been added to the list of accepted factors for evaluating and deciding problems. This paper cites 31 selected reports which sample some advanced information available for the new planning in two: (1) adoption of new policies and methods in policymaking organizations, and (2) sources of fundamental information from the social sciences and applications to the planning of urban services. This analytical survey of literature was prepared at the request of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans, United States Army. It is based on unclassified publications (friendly and unfriendly) located for the most part on the open shelves of the Army Library, Headquarters, Department of the Army, Pentagon. The 850 abstracts included in this publication were selected from a vast number of books, periodical articles, studies and documents, which in their aggregate reflect on the complexities of National Security, Military Power, and the Role of Force in International Relations. The survey covers a 30-year period from 1946 to 1976, a period which witnessed great shifts in military strategies of nations, and an unorthodox employment or threat of force in the relations between nations. The problems facing the military today are of such magnitude and complexity that there is an obvious need to recapitulate and take a look at the place of power and force in the real world. At this point it is fitting to state that this document is not intended as a syllabus to a course of study or a textbook on military science. (U)

This report constitutes a first step in improving the state-of-the-art of instructional systems development (ISD). It contains a bibliography of about 4,000 entries divided into the following sections: instructional systems development/ systems approach to training, evaluation, methodology selection, media selection, programmed instruction/ computer assisted instruction, task analysis, job analysis, task taxonomy, specific behavioral objectives, sequencing, instructor training, educational management, cost effectiveness, innovation, educational technology, human engineering, simulation, and systems analysis/ operations research. This report also presents a conceptual analysis of ISD, a process which is also known as: the systems approach to training (SAT), systems engineering of training (SET), training situation analysis (TSA), and the design of instructional systems (DIS). The related literature, dating from 1951 to the present, indicates the state-of-the-art to be unsettled. Over 100 ISD manuals are available which contain fundamental disagreement on the most basic aspects of course design. None of the manuals have been empirically validated. (U)

DESCRIPTORS: *Job analysis, *Marine Corps, *Clustering, Bibliographies, Military personnel, Classification, Methodology, Mathematical analysis (U)
IDENTIFIERS: Similarity groupings, Task analysis, Cluster analysis (U)

Cluster analysis in the task analysis process is a statistical methodology using algorithms to produce hierarchies that isolate groups of tasks that, because of their relationships, form separate jobs. It may perhaps be described as the central statistical technique for analyzing task analysis data in studies of Occupational Fields by the Marine Corps, the Air Force and other military services. As part of the research in Evaluation of the Marine Corps Task Analysis Program, a thorough search of the literature was conducted to discover published sources describing hierarchical clustering and related methods of classification analysis. This 184 item bibliography is a result of the search. The majority of references were published within the last ten years. (U)

Literature was reviewed from some 68 sources that indicated trends in advancement of technology for scientific and technical information for application to DDC's technical objectives for the 1978-1988 period. Events gleaned from the literature are intended for review by expert panels in information transfer to determine their desirability, feasibility, and probable timing. Findings are summarized in four categories: Technology, Organizational Structures and Applications, Economics and Marketing, and Scope of Services. An events list was developed with 41 projected events in information transfer considered by the project team to most likely affect the Defense community in 1978-1988. A bibliography of the 68 information sources is presented as an appendix. (Author) (U)

IDENTIFIERS: *Work rest cycles (U)

This bibliography is not intended to be an exhaustive survey of all studies relating to task efficiency, fatigue, or distribution of performance. It was undertaken to review those studies whose results would assist in the eventual selection of optimal work-rest cycles for specified types of performance. It became apparent during the literature search that only a few laboratory experiments clearly dealt with the work-rest cycling question. Hence, it became necessary to examine the results of a number of other studies which were less directly concerned with the question but were pertinent. In general, the studies were those in which observations of performance extended for a period of 24 hours or longer since it was felt that such a period of observations was the minimum necessary for valid applicability to the scheduling of work and rest over prolonged intervals. The practical requirement for social impact assessment in public works planning raises a fundamental problem of knowledge in sociology and related social science disciplines. This report, an analytic bibliography of materials relating that knowledge to the Corps' objectives, is a first step in making accessible and useful a growing body of social research that can illuminate the problem of social impact assessment and approaches to its solution. DESCRIPTORS: *Middle East, *Bibliographies, Political science, Economics, Government(Foreign), Tension, Conflict, North Africa, Israel, Arabia, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Turkey, Yemen, Canals, Waterways (U)
IDENTIFIERS: Suez Canal, Persian Gulf (U)

The purpose of the unclassified bibliographic survey was to update information on the Middle East which appeared in DA PMA 550-2-1, issued in April 1968. The publications included are available in the open holdings of The Army Library, Pentagon. The information appearing in the abstracts is supported by 51 appendixes including 30 maps, of which 24 are in color. The appendixes contain information of military, political, economic, and sociological nature. Materials dealing with Arab nations include both the countries of the Middle East and North Africa (the Maghreb). The organization of the table of contents and the manuscript are reflective of this approach to the subject. The main emphasis, however, is on the countries of the Middle East. Selections were made from several thousand periodical articles, books, studies, and reports, both friendly and unfriendly. No effort has been made to delete or exclude references by reason of their controversial nature. (U)

Like the previous volume on the subject (DA PAM 550-5) which was issued in April 1967, the new edition endeavors to assess the problems and prospects in the vast continent. The difficulties and accomplishments are looked at from both--a broad, regional point of view, as well as from a specific, national point of view. The work includes data on the strategic importance of Africa as a continent, and also provides facts and figures on the political, sociological, economic, and military aspects that contribute to the viability of individual African states. More than four thousand books, periodical articles, and monographs, were searched in the preparation of this work. The body of material is supported by 91 appendixes and 53 maps, of which 18 are in color. (U)

Over the two year contract period, the Science Communication Division provided a selective current awareness service of the published literature pertaining to drug abuse research, treatment, and rehabilitation. Material was scanned and evaluated as it pertained to the specific needs of the military services and to situations in which military personnel and their dependents would be expected to be involved. To insure that these goals were met, a questionnaire was prepared and distributed on an annual basis. The findings of the questionnaires were presented as reports to the agency. The report is a bibliography of the articles which were abstracted and disseminated through the drug abuse current alerting service. (U)

IDENTIFIERS: Innovations, Comparative studies (U)

The primary objective of the literature review was to obtain sources of information relevant to the feasibility and utility of an on-line data management system in support of the management and planning effort in the research and development environment of the Air Force Human Resources Laboratory. The formal documentation of the technical literature reviewed resulted in an annotated bibliography of 112 references. The intended audience for the bibliography was middle- and upper-level management personnel. Documents were selected that would familiarize such personnel with the context and interrelationships of the many aspects of management information systems (MIS); that is, with how analysis, design, operation, evaluation, and user considerations affect management information systems. The Dimensionality of Nations Project has had as long-range goals improving the ability to forecast international relations, and theoretically linking a number of diverse quantitative research approaches to international relations. The research itself involved analyzing the global system of nation-dyads to determine the linkages between behavior and nation similarities and differences (Task 1), repeating this analysis for Asian dyads (Task 2), and a simulation employing the results (Task 3). This Five-Year Program has been concluded, and the purpose of the report is to overview its accomplishments to date through summarizing and annotating the publications issued under the Program, 1967-1973. Arms Control and Disarmament attempts to bring under bibliographic control a large and growing body of literature in an important subject area. Each quarterly issue contains abstracts and annotations of current literature in English, French, and German languages, as well as abstracts and annotations of current literature in all languages published in English translation. Author and subject indexes appear in the first three numbers of each volume, with the fourth number containing cumulative author and subject indexes. To facilitate the use of this bibliography the title of each foreign language entry is preceded by its English translation in brackets. The bibliography is compiled from a survey of the literature received by the Library of Congress that is likely to be available in the larger research and public libraries in the United States. Sources surveyed include trade books, monographs, selected government publications, publications of national and international organizations and societies, and approximately 1,200 periodicals. (U)

The bibliography was undertaken to review studies that would be useful in estimating the probability of an offender's post-release success. Offenders and the requirements for processing them through the military justice system are major problems for the Army. Currently, emphasis is placed upon correctional treatment and returning a maximum number of offenders to duty with the potential for successful adjustment to Army life. In order to attain this end, offenders who will not or cannot respond to correction treatment need to be identified and separately processed. Effective correctional treatment programs needs to be developed and implemented for those identified as having potential for successful adjustment. The annotated bibliography examines the method and findings of many major civilian and military studies in the areas of prediction of delinquency and parole success. (Author) (U)

A bibliography is presented of the fields of mathematical and computational linguistics. Some 541 papers, articles, technical reports, and books are listed, which are either directly or indirectly related to the above fields. Approximately eighteen journals in linguistics, mathematics, and computer science were systematically reviewed from 1967 to 1971 for relevant papers. Although most references listed are in English, a few articles in German and French were included as well. The resulting bibliography was prepared in machine-readable form so that corrections and additions can be made readily in subsequent editions. (Author) (U)

The compilation grew out of a request made by a researcher for 'everything on income and wealth distribution and some material on 'proportional pricing'.' Thus, it is a highly selective bibliography heavily weighted in both distribution theory and narrative accounts of the United States experience. It opens with a brief listing of bibliographies and goes on to a section on the behavior of prices and their effect on the distribution of income and wealth. The third section deals with theory and the last with narrative discussions, first of the United States and then the United Kingdom, Asian countries, other countries and international comparisons. Within each section the arrangement is alphabetical, by author. Entry is by title if no author is listed. (Author) (U)

A managed program of data collection, storage and retrieval is basic to any systematic analysis of a nation's resources. This is accomplished at EARI by a continuing program of data acquisition involving domestic and foreign travel, national and international purchase and exchange arrangements and intensive collection research. The results of this program are maintained in a working file of selective hard copy material and to a much greater degree in a voluminous research card catalog containing appropriately indexed references to resource data held in other repositories throughout the world. The term natural resources is interpreted to include atmosphere, earth, water, climate, plants and animals individually and in interrelationship. Bibliography is used as any list which is arranged either by subject, or geographically, or in a form which readily reveals this information. It includes lists of research on the grounds that results will be published. Straight author or title lists have been excluded. (Author) (U)

The work concerned subject document retrieval systems (systems that retrieve documents in response to subject requests). It can be roughly classified into six categories: storage organization, automatic indexing, retrieval evaluation, retrieval relevance of documents, retrieval of 'answer-providing' documents, and a miscellaneous few preliminary studies of retrieval. The brief summaries and annotated bibliography are classified accordingly. (Author) (U)

The document is concerned with experimental development of the hypothesis that emotional responses--or evaluative responses, evaluative meaning, attitudes, values and so on--constitute an important type of response that can be calssically conditioned to words. Many stimuli elicit emotional responses and the words that are contiguously paired with those stimuli also come to elicit an emotional response. Moreover, once a word comes to elicit an emotional response the word can serve to condition emotionality to any other stimulus with which it is paired. A number of experiments have been conducted that show that emotional responses can be conditioned to words and that many words in the language elicit emotional responses that can be conditioned to other stimuli. The present bibliography lists the various experimental studies and theoretical analyses to April 1970. (U)

IDENTIFIERS: ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHIES, THEMIS PROJECT, *VIGILANCE (U)

Vigilance, or monitoring behavior, has been of interest to researchers since World War 2. Research activity has not only continued over the past 25 years, but has increased at an ever progressing rate. This bibliography was compiled to meet the need for a continuing program of research into the problem associated with recovery from the classical vigilance decrement, and is presented with annotations in the hope that it will be of value to investigators in the field. The bibliography contains abstracts and annotations of current literature in the English, French, German, and Russian languages, as well as abstracts and annotations of current literature in all languages published in English translation. It is compiled from a survey of the literature received by the Library of Congress that is likely to be available in the larger research and public libraries in the United States. Sources surveyed include trade books, monographs, selected government publications, publications of national and international organizations and societies, and approximately 1,700 periodicals. With the exception of materials delayed in arriving at the Library, the literature cited has usually been published in the 3 months preceding the month in which a number is sent to press. Entries are chosen under the assumption that arms control and disarmament is a subject area encompassing related topics such as weapons development and basic factors in world politics. The coverage is not exhaustive, however. It excludes articles in newspapers and the reporting of day-to-day events in newsmagazines. (Author) (U)

The book is an indirect product of a research project on the use of social science knowledge in international and military affairs. It examines the relationship between social scientists and the activities of the US Government in the International field since the beginning of World War II. The editors' two-fold purpose in selecting articles for this anthology from some 25 social scientists is made clear in their introduction to the book and its chapters. First, they point up the contribution each article makes to an understanding of the work social scientists have done in the field of international affairs, the determinants of the directions this work has taken, and the consequences or lack of consequences it has had for policy and action. They then take the articles themselves as case material. Here, the selections are used to illustrate how conceptions of the roles social scientists can play and should play are shaped by the positions social scientists occupy in a changing environment. In order to help readers gain a wider perspective on the subject, a comprehensive, annotated bibliographic appendix has been included. (Author) (U)

This bibliography is divided into three main sections. Part I is a separate listing of FY 1968 publications, arranged chronologically under code name or type of research other than Work Unit or under a general section (the Part I list also includes some papers from previous years that were published in FY 1968 as Professional Papers). Part II is a similarly arranged listing of all material that has been published by HumRRO under the Department of Army contract, and incorporates the 1968 titles from Part I. Part III is a collection of research by-products and other experimental materials, such as specific training programs or technical manuals; these are briefly described under research code names or general categories, with citation of publications in which they appear or to which they are related. Appendix A lists all Technical Reports, as well as reports published in earlier reporting categories, and the papers that have been published in the Professional Paper series; Appendix B lists, by HumRRO research division, all Work Units that have resulted in any published items. An author index and an extensive key-word-out-of-context (KWOC) index are provided to assist the user in locating desired information. (Author) (U)

The volume contains approximately 327 bibliographic citations, each accompanied by an abstract, of unclassified-unlimited bibliographies which were acquired by the Defense Documentation Center from August 1963 through October 1967. The subject areas covered are those which correspond to COSATI fields 1 - 6. Also included are the following computer-produced indexes: AD number, contract, subject, corporate author, personal author, and report number. All of the bibliographies listed are available from CFSTI. (U)

The bibliography is divided into two major sections. The first major section is devoted to the author and bibliography information. The authors are arranged in three subsections. The first subsection dealing with reports is arranged alphabetically by corporate author. The second subsection covering journal citations and the third subsection covering books are arranged alphabetically by the first personal author. Each entry in the bibliographic portion of this work includes corporate author when given, title, personal authors, date, pagination, publisher, journal identification when applicable, and report number. It is expected that from the information given each item should be obtainable from the proper source. All the items are unclassified and therefore should be available from many sources. Each item is given an accession number unique to the bibliography. (Author) (U)

A selective, unannotated listing of 664 U.S. and foreign publications that became available in 1967 relevant to the fields of computational linguistics and documentation. The listing includes books, articles, reports, and conference papers. There is selective coverage of classification techniques, computation and programming, with some attention to automata theory, computers and hardware, and social science text-processing by computer. The Documentation heading covers bibliographies, library catalogs, information systems, and publication systems. Computational Linguistics is divided into decoding and encoding; glossaries; machine translation; parsing; synthesis; and text files. Linguistics is subdivided into specific languages, especially English and Russian; algebraic syntax; research methods; and semantics. Arrangement is by subject, with indexes by author and by authors' organizational affiliation (if given). The index by countries includes 109 U.S. organizations, including 14 Federal Government agencies, and 87 organizations in other countries. (Author) (U)

The training analyst must be able to specify training media requirements during the early stages of weapon systems development. Also, training specialists frequently need to make training media selections for center or base level courses. This report provides such personnel with information to assist them in the development of training equipment requirements. The selected annotated bibliography contains 200 references to government sponsored training media research and development reports from 1950 through 1966. All of these reports are available through the Defense Documentation Center (DDC) to military agencies and their registered contractors. Each reference bears a DDC Accession Document (AD) number. Research and development reports on various technical aspects of training media (except operator training) which may be generalizable to maintenance are included; therefore, the information should be useful in other fields of technical training. The report describes, classifies, and graphically presents representative training media. The annotated bibliography contains references to (1) training media requirements, (2) training aids, including graphics, motion pictures, television, and general training aids, (3) trainers, and (4) teaching machines. A specialized bibliography, arbitrarily limited to 1000 entries, was assembled as a part of the background preparation for a long-range research program studying marine desert ecology, particularly as it occurs along the central coast of Peru. The ecology of this coast of Peru is more complicated than usual because the unusual foggy desert environment is a reflection of some remarkable near-shore conditions. This listing was prepared solely to serve certain needs of the investigators engaged in this marine desert ecology project, and should not be considered absolutely exhaustive in any of the component subject disciplines. The literature survey was undertaken to explore information on the nature of and conditions for effective visual perception at low light levels. From the survey, 407 reports or studies were selected for inclusion in the annotated bibliography. With a few exceptions, the material falls within the areas of detection, identification, and localization. Many laboratory studies are included which could undergo appropriate modification for repetition in natural settings at low light levels. In each annotation the purpose and the results or conclusions of the study are stated; method and procedure are indicated only briefly. (Author) (U)

Military Casualty and Statistical Data Associated with Wars, a Two-Part Bibliography, (U)

JAN 78 12P Miller,Lester L. , Jr;
REPT. NO. SPECIAL BIB-46

UNCLASSIFIED REPORT

DESCRIPTORS: *Casualties, *Bibliographies, Statistical data, Warfare, Military operations, Military personnel, Mortality rates, Military Forces(United States), Classification (U)

This bibliography presents chronological data on casualties of war and military statistics. Arrangement is in two parts. Part one deals with casualties as a result of war for conflicts dating from the French wars of 1614 through the Vietnam War concluded in 1975. There is little agreement on how to collect casualty data due to the problems of reporting methods, lack of consensus, or purpose for which accumulated particularly when different countries are involved. Military casualties are those losses which incapacitate an individual from performing normal duties and are caused by death, wounds, capture, discharge, desertion, illness, accident, suicide, murder, execution, among others, as they occur on or in support of the field of battle. This bibliography represents specific titles selected from the holdings of the Morris Swett Library. Materials of a general nature are not cited due to the wide variance in totals reported. (U)

Loss of life at sea during the First World War and previous conflicts was considerable but seems to have been regarded as inevitable. At all events, little or no effort was made to study and overcome the causes. Early in the Second World War the need for adequate lifesaving equipment became obvious and in 1941, at the request of the Medical Department of the Royal Navy, the Medical Research Council set up the Committee on the Care of Shipwrecked Personnel - representing jointly the Admiralty and the Royal Air Force - to see what could be done. In 1943, this Committee published a summary of the knowledge then available, in MRC War Memorandum No 8 entitled 'A Guide to the Preservation of Life at Sea after Shipwreck'. This short pamphlet was widely circulated and is a milestone in its subject. The Committee also instigated much research. In 1943, the MRC Royal Naval Personnel Research Committee was set up at the request of the Admiralty, and in 1946 the Shipwreck Survival Subcommittee. This was later renamed the Survival-at-Sea Subcommittee and is still in being. In 1970, the Subcommittee decided that the original War Memorandum should be brought up to date and that, as a start, a survey of work carried out on survival at sea should be prepared together with a comprehensive bibliography. The present review is the outcome. (U)

DESCRIPTORS: *Mammals, *Bibliographies, Southeast asia, Land areas, Zoonoses, History, Burma, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam, Philippines, Indonesia. Malaysia, India, China (U)
IDENTIFIERS: Hainan Island (U)

This bibliography was compiled in order to provide zoologists, medical and paramedical investigators, and others with a single source of references for the land mammals of Southeast Asia. The task was originally undertaken in conjunction with an investigation of mammal-borne anthropozoonoses in Southeast Asia. The countries primarily covered by this work are Burma, Thailand, Laos, Cambodia, North and South Vietnam, the Republic of the Philippines, Indonesia, Malaysia, and Hainan Island. Major works concerning mammals of India and southern China have also been included because of close faunal relationships and because authors who worked in India (and what is now Bangladesh) have frequently included Burma as a part of their study area. Papers presenting the results of laboratory experiments with captive animals are not included, although papers presenting physiological, anatomical, and parasitological data applicable to the natural state of the species are included. The effects of marijuana upon human performance is currently an area of major concern. No place is this concern more acute than in complex man-machine systems, such as those found in aviation, where degradations in psychomotor and/or cognitive performance can result in catastrophic losses. This annotated bibliography consisting of 199 references was compiled to aid the reader in determining the impact of this drug on psychomotor, cognitive, and physiological factors considered pertinent to flight performance. The index is a continuation of the bibliography on plague publisned by the 'Mikrob' Institute in 1968. Presented are literary sources on plague from 1965 through 1970. In contrast to the former one, this index includes not only Soviet but also foreign literature. Several works by Soviet authors not noted in the first edition are also listed. Works dealing with the ecology of the 'carriers' and 'vectors' of plague are given broader attention. The index has its foundations in the scientific library of the 'Mikrob' Institute. Publications of the All-Union Academic Board (Academic Annals, Annals of Periodical Articles), reference journals of the All-Union Scientific-Research Technical Institute and foreign reference journals are included. Except for those works marked with an asterisk, the literature indexed in the bibliography was reviewed in the original. Arrangement of the material is systematic and alphabetical, within limits. The bibliography is accompanied by an index of secondary authors and there is also a list of the sources used. (U)

DESCRIPTORS: *Hyperbaric conditions, *Diving, *Medicine, *Bibliographies, Stress(Physiology), Underwater, Environments, Submarine personnel, Abstracts, Books, Thesau (U)

The purpose of these annotated bibliographies is to make available a large proportion of the published material, in abstract form, indexed in such a manner as to make it possible to compile a reasonably complete annotated bibliography on any specific area in the field. It is possible thus to learn where the work is being done, by whom, and how extensively. With the increasing need for knowledge of the underwater environment and the medical, physiological, psychological, and technological problems posed thereby, this ongoing bibliographic effort should prove invaluable to the professional diving community, from the aspect of practical considerations as well as that of research. DESCRIPTORS: *Bibliographies, *Noise(Sound), *Psychological warfare, Physiological effects, Behavior, Performance(Human), Psychology, Literature surveys, Humans, Weapon systems, Frequency, Waveforms, Sound pressure (U)

The literature on the effects of sound on man was reviewed for the years 1965-1972. The purpose of the review was to identify the aversive properties of sound which might be exploited in the development of nonlethal (and non-permanently-damaging) weapon systems. The results suggest that, although parameters such as frequency, wave form, and sound pressure level do affect human behavior, further experimental work is needed in the analysis and synthesis of aversive sounds before significant short-term behavioral changes are possible. The Murayama hypothesis for the molecular events involved in the interior of a sickling hemoglobin red cell is based in part on his construction of a precision scale model of the hemoglobin S molecule. Murayama, drawing in part upon the molecular investigations of others, such as Pauling, Braunitzer, Konigsberg, Muirhead, Perutz, and Ingram, has in effect provided us with a molecular definition of disease and a description of molecular interaction which has pathogenetic significance in sickle cell disease. This is the first time any disease has been understood in such terms at the molecular level in medicine. The cited references in this bibliography are all directly derived from the Murayama hypothesis either by deduction or inference. (U)

A non-quantitative theory of human hearing is sketeched for the case of the head immersed in water, based upon what is known of hearing in air and hearing by bone conduction. A consideration is given of four routes by which acoustic waterborne energy is transmitted to the fluids of the inner ear. Quantitative data are presented from recent studies of the thresholds of underwater auditory acuity, and of the relations between airborne and waterborne thresholds. Sound levels possibly hazardous to free swimmers are suggested and the intelligibility of speech passed through water is discussed. Studies on the ability of the human to localize sound water are discussed. The acute otorhinological problems of the outer, middle, and inner ear are discussed in both aquatic and dysbaric environments. A bibliography of 250 items is presented which constitutes a valuable reference tool. (Author) (U)

DESCRIPTORS: *Diptera, *Insects, *Bibliographies, Entomology, Pests, Taxonomy, Canada (U)
IDENTIFIERS: Pollenia rudis (U)

The cluster fly often becomes a pest in the autumn when large numbers of them enter homes and other buildings to overwinter. Adults do not bite and there is no evidence that they are involved in the transmission of disease. The larvae will parasitise certain species of earthworm. Three or more Canadian laboratories have been studying different aspects of this pest for the past three years, and the authors believe that a bibliography of this insect would be of value to many workers at this time. To that end is offered the attached list of over 120 references preceded by some very brief notes on the contents of key papers. (U)

A review of ecological effects of offshore dredging is presented, based on literature review and personal contacts, to provide a framework for determination of need for further knowledge. In general, little concrete effort aimed specifically at the determination of effects of offshore dredging was uncovered, although basic ecological works that are generally applicable are available. The report shows that the beach may be divided into three zones on the basis of moisture and biota found, and describes the possible effects on these biota resulting from offshore dredging and deposition of sediments on a beach. Background descriptive material and impacts on both offshore dredged areas and nourished beaches, and suggestions for further research follow. (U)

The literature on biological sonar systems (bats, birds, marine mammals) was reviewed and past and present investigators were interviewed to ascertain the contributions, present and potential, of work in this field to high resolution sonar technology. It was concluded that there have been no contributions to date. Five areas of research were identified as potentially contributory: passive target ranging by the owl, signal design for target recognition, neural processing for target detection and recognition, the psychophysiology of sound localization, and the mechanics of signal generation by the small whales. The available system(s) and performance data on the bats and small whales are tabulated, and up-to-date bibliographies on each biological order are included. (Author) (U)

Four years (1966-1971) of research on the physiological rhythms, processes, and adaptations of arctic mammals is summarized (Part I) and detailed attention is given to 1971-72 activities (Part II). Study of the seasonal as well as the daily physiological changes has been carried out; and the concept of interacting adaptations has been developed, with emphasis on radio telemetry. An extensive bibliography of publications which have arisen from this project is included, as are several of the articles themselves. (Author) (U)

DESCRIPTORS: (*ERYTHROCYTES, PRESERVATION), (*BIBLIOGRAPHIES, ERYTHROCYTES), ABSTRACTS, STATE-OF-THE-ART REVIEWS, BLOOD, STORAGE, BLOOD TRANSFUSION, STABILITY, VIABILITY, FREEZING, HEMATOLOGY (U)

This bibliography covers the literature of red cell preservation and related subject areas for the period January 1, 1956 through December 31, 1969. In addition, 25 references are included which appeared in 1965. The bibliography is the result of work on a Project which consists of searching the literature, both primary and secondary, and preparing the material for transmittal each month to a number of approved recipients who are interested in blood preservation, particularly in red cell preservation by freezing. Following the response to a questionnaire sent out early during the Project, a rather broad approach to the subject was taken. Abstracts were prepared for those articles which are not accompanied by abstracts with the exception of a few references which are in Japanese only. (Author) (U)

Over one thousand references on electric shock hazards and electrical safety are included from three computer retrievals, a sixty-hour Library of Congress search and contributions from over 50 organizations and individuals. The citations are divided into sections according to subject matter and arranged alphabetically by author within each section. Emphasis is upon published original experimental work concerning physiological thresholds to electric current at power transmission frequencies. Experimental work on biological impedances and on the pathophysiology of electric shock is also represented extensively. Clinical reports of pathological sequelae of electric shock are categorized, as are electrical safety standards in industry, agriculture and medicine. A few biological references obtained on peripherally-related subjects such as electroanesthesia, electroconvulsive therapy and legal execution are included. Finally, selected general reviews are presented. (Author) (U)

The effects of sleep loss on human task performance are discussed under total, partial, and selective deprivations of sleep. Some of the frequently used psychological tasks in studies of total sleep loss are described in sufficient detail so that experimenters could choose, on the basis of materials presented in this monograph, adequate tasks to fit their experimental objectives. Factors which play critical roles in determining the degree of task sensitivity to total sleep loss are listed. Effects of shortened hours of sleep on human task performance are discussed. Effects of selected sleep deprivation on performance are also commented upon. The commentary is followed by a bibliography on sleep deprivation with author and subject indices. (Author) (U)

In space flight, during the takeoff, landing, and in-flight adjustments, the astronaut is exposed to changing gravitational experiences that influence his cardiovascular, respiratory, and sensory mechanisms, muscular responses, etc. These physiological responses in space are monitored by telemeter systems that detect and transmit the data to ground stations. The bibliography presents 161 annotated references dealing with these aspects of space medicine, with emphasis on biotelemetry, weightlessness, visual effects, hearing effects, and animal experimentation. The tolerance for acceleration has been studied by experimentation on the centrifuge using human and animal subjects. Body positioning relative to the direction of the increased gravitational forces was found to be critical. In an upright position, the gravitational shifts of blood may leave the brain cells without adequate blood and oxygen supply causing 'grayout' or blackout' at 4 to 6g. This annotated bibliography compiles 99 unclassified and unlimited references of documents that have been cataloged in the DDC collection. (Author) (U)

This volume is one of a series of six in the second edition of an annotated bibliography on various aspects of immunofluorescence and its use. The first six-volume edition was published in 1965 and included citations for the period 1905 through 1962. The present edition covers the period 1963 through 1965; Volume VI is divided into two major sections. The first section contains 292 annotated citations to general procedures in the use of immunofluorescence, arranged by subject areas. The second section contains 360 cross-references to citations in the other volumes that describe specific applications of this technique; these are arranged to correspond with the subject areas of the other volumes. A complete author index for these 652 citations is included. (Author) (U)

IDENTIFIERS: IMMUNOSUPPRESSION (U)

The study was conducted as a part of a broad review of selected problems in military medicine-research and development, to provide the Office of The Surgeon General of the Army with the most current information on the treatment of ionizing radiation injury in the soldier. These studies and their comprehensive, evaluative bibliographies will facilitate the evaluation of future research and development programs on the treatment of radiation injury and military nuclear medicine. The report includes the nature of hematopoietic injury and recovery, immunologic changes that influence bone marrow allograft transplants and the decreased resistance to infection, animal models used to study allograft responses, use of antilymphocyte sera and antilymphocyte globulin as immunosuppressive substances, and the phenomena of host-versus-graft and graft-versus-host reactions. The evidence for the reported success with leukocyte typing for donor selection is reviewed as related to bone marrow transplantation. An annotated, evaluative bibliography is included as an appendix. (Author) (U)
