FOREWORD

This checklist of Morris Swett Library holdings on firing tables presents generalized information about their construction along with tabulated data on specific weapons. Part One covers U.S. weapons. Part Two concerns foreign artillery weapons by class on a by-country basis, as suggested by the table of contents. If a specific firing table is owned, the "F.T." number is cited along with brief identifying information to introduce the relevant model. A fuller entry is shown if several calibers or models are covered in one book. Arrangement of this list is numerical, by bore diameter size (mm, cm, in, pdr), and model number within the caliber. Since this listing is not complete, respondents are encouraged to share data on any other weapons not shown.

U.S. Army Regulation 310-25, dated 15 September 1975, provides an apt definition for the ballistics characteristics reflected by firing, or range, tables as follows:

"Firing table (A) - Table or chart giving the data needed for firing a weapon accurately on a target under standard conditions and also the corrections that must be made for special conditions such as wind or variations of temperature."

General Eisenhower's World War Two remark that "Our massed fire technique was one of the decisive factors of our ground campaign throughout the world" takes on added meaning when it is considered that massed concentrations of fire were possible because we appreciated the need for developing these mnemonic aids.

The cataloging data which follows is indicated due to the fact that firing table coverage is placed according to certain principles. With this information in hand, browsing throughout libraries set-up on the Library of Congress system is possible.

The Morris Swett Library Cataloging Department pioneered in the development of the Military Science portion("U") of the Library of Congress classification scheme to anticipate changing requirements brought on by historical and technical developments from 1911 when the Library was first established. Part of this planning is reflected by the following "UL - Ordnance and Gunnery" development of the system.
