International Conference To Review Constitution

92P50028A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL
MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 1

[Article by D. Ariunbold: "The Role of the New Constitution"]

[Text] This is the theme of an international conference which will open in Ulaanbaatar on 9-13 September. The conference is sponsored by the Mongolian Parliamentary Group jointly with the State Small Hural and the Draft Constitution Commission.

This conference is being called for a number of reasons. First, it would be a testimony of the irreversibility of the process of restructuring and renewal in this country as the new draft Constitution includes a number of novelties related to state structure, political system, guarantees of basic human rights and freedoms, and reflects those changes which have been outlined toward a market-based economy. The draft would be a fundamental document which will define the future of the Mongolian society with a humane, fair and law-governed state.

On the other hand, the conference participants will draft unofficial recommendations and not instructions, containing a competent analysis of its letters and articles. This, to a certain measure, is to become that information base which the MPs will have to consider during the discussion of the draft of the State Yassa at the Congress of the Great People's Hural this November.

This conference with the participation of top experts from different countries is being organized in view of the fact that the opinions and evaluations regarding the draft Constitution, expressed in the course of nationwide discussion vary greatly. The recommendations and evaluations by these experts are called upon to provide answers to the questions whether the present draft corresponds to those standards applied in highly developed and civilized countries and what extent the provisions concerning human rights guarantees have been reflected in the draft.

The conference will include the panels on the following:

1. Human rights and humanitarian issues in the draft Constitution.
2. The theory and practice of parliamentary democracy: the relationship between the legislative and the executive branches of government; implications for Mongolia.
3. The independent judiciary and its relationship to other branches of government: the relation between judicial independence and the method of selecting judges.
4. Local government systems and possible applications for Mongolia.

So far, MPs and experts from Russia, India, Poland, Bulgaria, Federal Germany, France, the USA, Italy, Afghanistan and Amnesty International have expressed their desire to participate. Written recommendations have been sent in by the Interparliamentary Union.

Similar joint study and analysis of a particular country's constitution is a common practice worldwide. A similar meeting was held in Bulgaria when the country was drafting its new constitution, and the conference proved extremely productive.

Government Limits Number of Fixed Price Commodities

92P50021A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL
MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 2

[Article by D. Ariunbold: "Inflation Dictates Conditions"]

[Text] Recently the Government of Mongolia passed a Resolution 240 "On Additional Measures Toward Transition to Free Price System."

The passing of this resolution means that the prices of fewer commodities will be controlled and fixed by the Government. Earlier this year she passed a decision according to which the price of almost 60 percent of the goods from the total goods turnover was liberalized, i.e., free price was introduced. And so the Resolution 240 is a continuation of the push towards price liberalization.

Until 1 September, the prices of 37 different commodities and consumer items were fixed and their number has now shrunk to 17. Of these 17 items, there are 10 kinds of foodstuffs (meat, flour, granulated sugar, baby food, bread, butter, green tea, etc.) and 7 manufactured goods (cotton fabric, children's clothes and shoes, text books and copies, medicine, etc.).

Liberalization of price formation and control on price have been prompted by the transition to the market-based economy. Nonetheless, price hike should not be spontaneous but should be effected under real correlation between demand and supply. Presently, in view of certain difficulties, in particular, total shortage of commodities, huge budget deficit, hoarding of cash by the population and weakening purchasing capacity of the tugrik and others, are contributing to the spiralling of the inflation process.

Total deficit is conducive to latent price hike. Unchanging price, checked by directives, fully engages market as an instrument of control on production and consumption. Consequently, the number of people with huge accumulation of money grows as there is no increase in production output. In other words, money-paper printing machines are set in motion full speed. The Government, with the object of checking, some way or the other, these negative phenomena, has decided to liberalize prices. Such a policy, first of all, encourages producers and secondly, stimulates import.

In essence, the increase in price will strongly tell on the living standards of the population, especially those who have low income. In this context, the Government has set to work out a programme of compensation, i.e., raising wages and salaries to an adequate level. But, in view of the galloping price increase, such a measure is unlikely to yield effective results. Hence, there arises the task of elaborating a mechanism of monetary compensation in keeping with the overall indices of changing retail prices. In other words, any price hike should be clearly and timely evaluated with the help of price indices or indices of the cost of life.

The prices of some consumer goods have gone up as compared to the previous years. All meat products, excluding carcass, have become expensive by 50 percent. Hams and sausages (smoked) will now sell at 34-84 tugriks a kilogramme. (Earlier it was 14-36 tugrik). Pastries, sweets and candies will now cost 20-54 percent more and the price of confectionary products has increased from 2.3 to 41 percent.

Aspects of Mongolian Privatization Process Described

[Interview with C. Bat, Deputy Chairman of the Privatization Commission]

[Text] From discussion of privatization issues to the very process of denationalizing state property—this is how the present period when new problems crop up and suggestions are being made for the future. [as printed] What are the special features of privatization in Mongolia? Answers to this and other questions are provided by C. Bat, Deputy Chairman of the Privatization Commission under the Ulaanbaatar city municipality.

MM: How do you characterize the privatization process in Ulaanbaatar?

Bat: The basic guidelines of privatization were considered and approved at a sitting of the Presidium of the Executive Board of the city People's Hural on 1 August, 1991. This process will be carried out in several stages. As a part of the preparatory stage, eight state-run trade and service centres were auctioned in June. Within its framework also vouchers with a nominal cost of 10,000 tugriks each are being sold (the blue voucher costs 7,000 T and the three pink vouchers—1,000 T each). These vouchers are being given to all citizens of Mongolia, who were born before 1 June 1991, through local savings banks after the citizens deposit 200 T each. All invalids, including citizens whose monthly family income per person is less than 200 T are receiving them free of charge. So far more than 20,000 vouchers have been distributed.

MM: How many vouchers in total will be distributed?

Bat: Approximately 570,000 will be distributed not only to the inhabitants of Ulaanbaatar but also to those living in satellite towns and in the suburbs of the capital.

The most important thing in this process are the enterprises subject to denationalization. By the end of 1991 almost 40 percent of public sector enterprises will be privatized under the small privatization plan and next year another 40 percent in the big privatization.

MM: What are the special features of this process in terms of Mongolia?

Bat: First, as I have already said, the nominal cost of the vouchers being distributed includes the basic assets of state enterprises subject to denationalization. In other words, almost 30 billion T worth of basic assets of the country are being transferred free of charge into the hands of the people.

Second, the consideration of the experience, both the pros and cons, of developing and Eastern European countries.[as printed] There are instances when, as distinct from Ulaanbaatar especially in the provinces and rural districts, there are a relatively few enterprises subject to small privatization. Consequently, there is an influx into Ulaanbaatar of the pink vouchers from these areas.

MM: How is this influx going to be controlled?

Bat: Those people who have obtained such vouchers can either change roles as customers or sellers. In order to help them a small exchange will be opened under the city privatization commission, where people will be able to sell their vouchers. The exchange has been opened at the Economic College where the pink coupons are being auctioned. In the past half a month 18 thousand customers have placed orders and transactions worth 500,000 T have been made. One set of three coupons are sold at, on an average, 2,600 T.

MM: How is your commission working? Its pluses and minuses mean plus and minus of the privatization process also.

Bat: Our commission is not large, it has only 5 members. We have set up a privatized fund from the sale of vouchers, which will be used for financing and providing credits to privatized enterprises. The fund will also go to financing and retraining personnel, especially those who have become jobless in the process. It will also be used in setting up new trade and service centres, which will be eventually privatized.

MM: What are your future plans?

Bat: Hundreds of small shopping and service centres will be privatized in September, which will not be priced in tugriks. In other words, 70-80 percent of public sector enterprises will go private.

Emergency Aid Bolsters Mongolian Economy

MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 1

[Text] Mongolia has received an emergency aid package of US$ 155 million from a group of 14 nations and five international organizations. This aid came from a meeting in Tokyo of the Mongolian Assistance Group. A Mongolian delegation led by D. Ganbold, First Deputy Prime Minister, attended the meeting.

This emergency aid is primarily aimed at passing the coming winter, which, judging by the past years, will be extremely severe.

Japan, which hosted the meeting, pledged the largest amount of aid—$35 million in yen-based loans and $15 million in grants. Japan will also provide an additional $11 million in technical aid, including the dispatch of experts, this year.

The help will go to the import of heavy-duty dump lorries for the coal mines as well as material and ingredients for the food and light industry.

The USA has granted $10 million on conditions they are used for buying from the Soviet Union spare parts and machinery for the power industry. "In other words, Western assistance will help ensure a reliable energy and food supply to the population this winter," said D. Ganbold. "Our efforts seeking foreign aid are designed at overcoming the economic crisis, expediting the transition to market and alleviating the social consequences during the transition period."

According to First Deputy Premier $155 million aid-package is not a final figure. Some of the meeting participants, particularly those who attended it in the capacity of observers, were unable to coordinate with their government concrete size of aid because they learnt of the meeting quite late. Apart from this, a group of countries have pledged to render help in training personnel, which cannot be expressed in figures. So, more aid will be coming.

International financial and economic organizations are to render substantial aid to help Mongolia recover from her ailing economy. The World Bank, International Monetary Fund and Asian Development are expected to give $25 million to $30 million in aid. The form and criteria of granting extensive assistance have been determined on the basis of an analysis of Mongolia's economy made by the experts of these institutions.

"Generally speaking," continued D. Ganbold, "the current meeting testified to the interests of Western countries to help Mongolia, specifically its efforts for renewal and restructuring. During the meeting, I had the impression that its participants were worried over guarantees that there was no turning back of this process."

The extremely difficult economic situation in the country could, no doubt, entail political instability. The country, therefore, fully realizes that international assistance is not a charity which can be used as Mongolia deems necessary. The road to economic freedom and democratization is shaky and tangible results can be achieved only through a decisive action in this direction and selfless efforts of the people. In this context, the international community is prepared to render aid and support.

"The most important thing in acquiring international assistance is to use it most effectively, or else the country will find herself saddled with huge foreign debt," warns the First Deputy Premier.

Indeed so, his misgivings come from our past bitter experience, when we simply wasted away such aid. Therefore, a most pressing task, in D. Ganbold's words, is to "create a mechanism of strict control on the distribution and application of the present international aid package."

"The Tokyo meeting was productive. Its participants with understanding regarded our problems and promised to study more closely our economic and other possibilities. This was highly conducive to fostering mutual understanding and outlining concrete forms of cooperation. In other words, these countries opened for themselves a new partner in the face of Mongolia. In this connection, I would like to thank," said the First Deputy Premier, "the Government of Japan for hosting the meeting. The World Bank, as a patron, did a lot to canvass aid and support for Mongolia."

The assistance group will hold its second meeting next spring to follow up on this year's aid and to consider assistance for 1992.

Resolutions of First Mongolian Democratic Union Plenum Issued

924M0004A Ulaanbaatar ARDCHILAL in Mongolian
No 14, 8-14 Apr 91 p 1

[Resolutions of the First Plenum of the Mongolian Democratic Union]

[Text]

No 1, Ulaanbaatar, Apr 6 91

Concerning the Operations of the General Coordinating Council, 33 Regional Coordinating Councils and Unified Branch Councils of the Mongolian Democratic Union

Having heard and discussed the activity reports of 18 persons, members of the above mentioned organizations and of the General Coordinating Council, the following has been noted by the First Plenum of the Mongolian Democratic Union:

a) The Plenum has appropriately evaluated the clear contribution of the General Coordinating Council to the process of democratic revolution. The council has assumed honorably and responsibly the leadership and organization of the Mongolian Democratic Union. The members of the General Coordinating Council of the Mongolian Democratic Union, after being elected at people's meetings taking place at every level, have rejected honest criticism and effective operations. They have repeatedly violated peaceful democratic discipline and the chain of command in their actions, and have given rise to deficiencies in the area of human rights and ethics. Judging the real facts of the matter from the reports and speeches of the members of the General Coordinating Council, it has been specifically noted that there have been, in addition to disagreement on policy, violations of individual rights and abandonment of the principle of collective leadership as egomania has gained ground. The members of the General Coordinating Council proved unable to draw conclusions from their own deficiencies, and from the deficiencies of others, and to show initiative in resolving the question without delay. As a consequence things have gotten worse. The modus operandi and regulations of the Mongolian Democratic Union have lost in importance in the wake of energetic change. The fact that the Mongolian Democratic Union has lacked a unified policy or strictly organized structure has not only influenced the operations of the Central Coordinating Council but has led to a weakening of political consciousness and initiative throughout the Mongolian Democratic Union as a political force.

b) There has been the tendency for the irregularities and deficiencies of the Central Coordinating Council of the Mongolian Democratic Union to find reflection in the work of some regional coordinating councils. It has been observed that decisions coming down from above have been returned, that active operations have not been carried out suited to local peculiarities, and that there has been laxity in vitally important work to develop the democratic revolution resolutely. The Plenum was extremely critical of this.

c) The plenum was attentive to the fact that there has been slowness in the area of carrying out active and effective actions as component policy lines in the operations of unified branch councils organized for specific specialities based upon the initiative of the masses.

The plenum has noted that increasing the reputation of the Mongolian Democratic Union, as it has further energized new innovative, creative and traditional properties of democratic revolution, and has fulfilled its historical functions honorably as standard-bearer of the revolution while strengthening its operations, is the first priority of every level of Mongolian Democratic Union organization, of its thousands upon thousands of members and supporters. The Plenum therefore resolves:

1. The General Coordinating Council of the Mongolian Democratic Union is charged with the following tasks:

1. It will carefully develop reports on Mongolian Democratic Union operations, drafts of policies and regulations and other documents, and will present them for discussion and ratification to the Second Congress of the Mongolian Democratic Union.

2. Until the Second Congress of the Mongolian Democratic Union, regulations of the General Coordinating Council of the Mongolian Democratic Union currently in force will be observed strictly by Council members.

3. A concrete structure for the central apparatus of the Mongolian Democratic Union will be brought into being. The plan is to be ratified and put into effect.

4. Regulations will be developed and ratified for financial operations of the Mongolian Democratic Union, and for the operations of its central apparatus.

5. Questions regarding relations of the Mongolian Democratic Union and the Mongolian Democratic Party will be discussed conjointly with the National Committee of the Mongolian Democratic Party, and both the Central Coordination Council and the National Committee will be charged with the development of future policy.

6. S. Dzorig, general coordinator of the Mongolian Democratic Union, will have the duty of making a short report to the Plenum jointly reporting on how the members of the General Coordinating Council have performed and observed the rules of the General Coordinating Council, and on work accomplished in the period before the convening of the party congress.

II. Members of Local Coordinating Council and of Unified Branch Councils:

1. Will, while carrying out with proper preparation meetings and gatherings of the councils responsible in each respective case and factually and honestly evaluating the functions of councils, members and coordinators, have the duty of delivering to the General Coordinating Council of the Mongolian Democratic Union by the 25 April clear summary reports, financial and other accounting calculations, together with proposals which they feel should be included in the documents of the Second Congress of the Mongolian Democratic Union.

III. Members and Supporters of the Mongolian Democratic Union:

1. Should be called upon to work intensely to make a truly creative contribution. Should acquaint themselves in depth with the provisions of the above resolution evaluating the operations of leadership organizations of the Mongolian Democratic Union, plan for the new by showing active initiative of every kind in the area carrying out the Second Congress of the Mongolian Democratic Union, embracing the entire Mongolian masses, at a high level of organization.

Soviet Withdrawal, Future Choyr City Plans Discussed

Status of Soviet Withdrawal Plans

924M0011A Ulaanbaatar YARILTSIYA in Mongolian
No 4, 1991 pp 18-20

[Article by JR. Gabaa, major general, chief of staff of the MPR armed forces and first deputy minister of defense]

[Excerpts] At the beginning of 1989, there were 15 Soviet military garrisons in the MPR. There were 32 independent military villages, including those in Ulaanbaatar, Baga-nuur, Bulgan, Erdenet, Choybalsan, Choyr, Shibeegobi, Saynshand, Mandalgobi, Maynt, Nalayah, Erhet, and Darhan. During 1989 and 1990, the withdrawal of all Soviet military tank and air units was completed. At the beginning of 1990, the Soviet troops which had been quartered in Nalayh, Saynshand, Choybalsan, Erhet and 14 small villages were completely withdrawn, and the villages were transferred to the MPR. As a result, the following were transferred and given to the MPR: one military airport and seven air fields, a total of 117 military villages, 249 apartment houses accommodating 9,940 families or households, 415 military buildings, 105 quarters accommodating 4,270 persons, 87 restaurants for 29,000 persons, 11 schools for children, 47 medical buildings with a 1,270 bed-capacity, 78 steam furnaces with 578 steam boilers, 52 buildings for clubs having seating capacity for 16,000 persons and 578 storage facilities to house technical and material items. If their value were computed, it would amount to 179,140,000 tugriks. Unfortunately, it will not be possible to utilize many of the buildings nor much of the equipment and material items. For example, the coverings of the electric lights of all the buildings in Shibeegobi are broken, the walls are caving in, and material items from many buildings have been looted.

Other Soviet troops will be withdrawn between 15 May and 1 September 1991. Therefore, in accordance with the agreements and pacts, it will be necessary to withdraw the troops during the warm season and to transport the weapons and technical equipment during the winter. Accordingly all the Soviet troops who have been quartered in the MPR will be completely withdrawn in 1991, and the weapons and technical equipment in 1992. For example, in 1991, the troops stationed at the garrisons in Choyr, Erhet, Mandalgobi and Bulgan Aymags were completely withdrawn. During 1991 the military units and regiments in Ulaanbaatar, Baganuur, Darhan and Maynt are to be fully withdrawn. In 1991 and 1992, many buildings and structure including 106 apartment buildings for 5,045 households and seven schools for 2,100 children, will be transferred to the MPR.

Transformation from Soviet Military Community to MPR City

[Article by O. Enhtubshin]

[Excerpts] The State Small Hural has combined Bayantol horoo and the small towns in the territory of Sumber Somon, located in Dornogobi Aymag. This area has been named Choyr City and has been given the status of a city. Soviet military units and regiments were quartered in one garrison each in Choyr and Shibeegobi, two garrisons in Sumber, and one at Bayantal horoo (railroad crossing no 18). This somon occupies 5,500 square kilometers and borders along eight somons of Tob, Hentiy, and Dornod Aymags.

A total of 35 five-storey housing units, three hotels (80-120 beds), three clubs, two four-storey military buildings, five dining rooms with seating capacity for 500, three bakeries which produce almost 30 tons of bread daily, five buildings for shops specializing in food commodities, and three general education schools with seating capacity for 200-624 children were located in these military localities. In addition there were buildings for social, cultural, and economic purposes, including those to house the 25-meter long swimming pool, the hot water facility, chemical cleaning establishment and washing combine.

When the majority of the small- and medium-sized enterprises, cooperatives, and firms have been established in the above-mentioned localities between 1991 and 1995, the future demographic plan of Ulaanbaatar will be affected, its electric power, housing, water supply, transportation, trade, and service burdens will be reduced, and the unemployment situation of the capital city should be alleviated. The Shibeegobi coal, Oortsog-Oboo tin, the Bor-ondor, Adag, Ondor-Oboo and Bayan-Ugaal fluorspar, Naydar metallic rock, the Shar shoroo mineral dye, Ih-Tsaydam nuur salt, the Harrat uranium, Haldzan-oo spring and the Dзамын-Ulaan perlite and the Ih jargalan ornamental stone deposits, all located in the Choyr district, will be exploited industrially.

In the future consideration must be given to making Choyr City a free economic zone because its production and service expansion potential is excellent and it has favorable extra housing, air, rail, and electric power supply conditions.

Joint Oil Exploration, Processing Endeavors Intensify

Geological Surveys

92P50029A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 3

[Article by D. Jargalsayha, Mongolian Petroleum Company: "Oil of Mongolia"]

[Text] Geophysical surveys conducted recently in Mongolia together with Americans prove that the country has good prospects for oil exploration.

It has a sizeable number of basins, thick sediments, oil seeps from good source rock (oil shale) and two already discovered fields.

According to specialists, the discovery of huge oil fields in Western Siberia in the Soviet Union and the northern parts of China close to Mongolian borders are a proof that there could be oil in this country.

By the by, Mongolia has been producing its own oil from the 40's till the 60's. Some 200 exploratory wells were drilled in Mongolia, 80 percent of them in the East Gobi basin. Several thousand shallow core holes related to oil and gas exploration have been drilled in this area.

Two oil fields were discovered in Dzuunbayan sub-basin in late 1941 by core hole drilling of surface oil seeps.

Later it was developed and limited quantity of oil was produced until 1969 when a fire destroyed the onsite refinery. During this period cumulative production reached 3.85 mln barrels.

Oil production and exploration stopped about 30 years ago when it was decided that the needs of the country in oil would be met by imports from the USSR.

Today, Mongolia spends 40-50 percent of its export earnings on the import of petroleum products from the Soviet Union. This amount had to be reduced in view of the present economic crisis in the country. Moreover, the Soviet Union, the traditional supplier of petroleum, wants payments in hard currency and even then, sometimes, fails to ensure a stable delivery of petroleum and related products, which is about 20,000 barrels a day.

In such circumstance, in early 1990, the MPR Government decided to set up a state company-Mongol Gadzryn Tos or Mongolian Petroleum Company (MGT) to administer all petroleum related matters, including research and exploitation.

Last year, specialists of the company conducted geological exploration surveys and also participated in drafting the Law on Petroleum, which was discussed and approved by the State Small Hural (Parliament) recently.

MGT in cooperation with its consultant company—Exploration Associates International of Texas (EAIT)—has made presentations to the oil industry in Houston, USA (December 1990) and in London (February 1991) attended by about 60 oil companies.

Together with EAIT the company prepared a joint venture report "The Petroleum Potential of Mongolia."

In May, 1991 the company opened 10 contract areas in the country's southern and western parts (see map) for bidding and a number of oil companies have expressed their interest in participating in the first round of bidding.

Contract negotiations and awards are scheduled for December 1991 and January 1992.

The second round of bidding will start in April 1992 immediately after the geological survey, which has been commenced by the Western Geophysical, one of the world's largest seismic survey companies.

The MGT fears that the small internal market and lack of infrastructure necessary for oil exploration, production and transportation could hamper further progress in this area critically important for Mongolia.

Oil Processing in Mongolia

92P50029A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL
MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 3

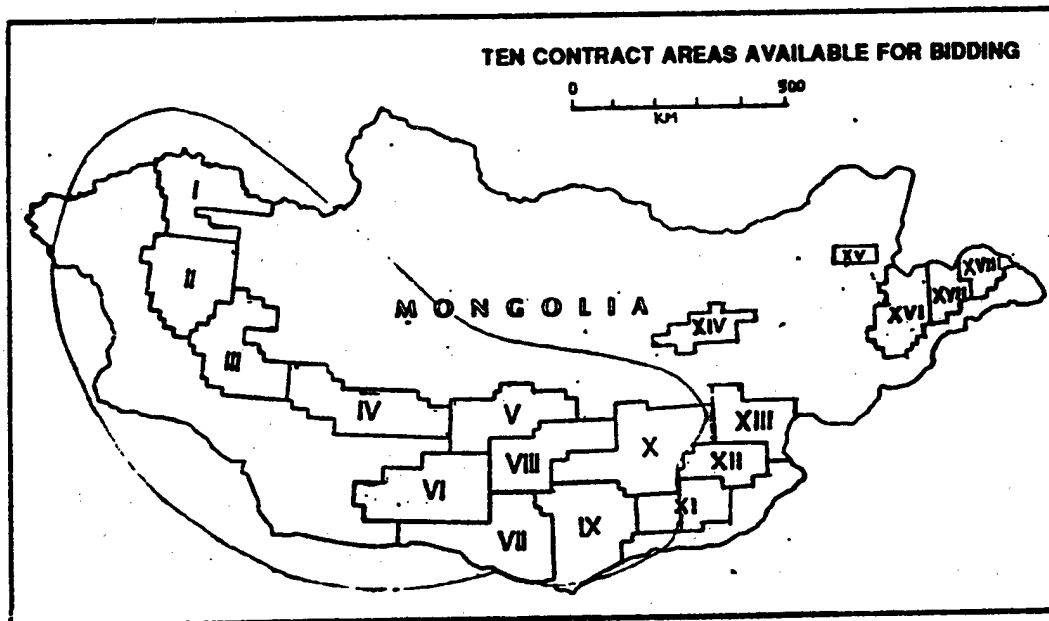

[Text] The other day C. Purebdorj, Deputy Prime Minister of Mongolia received Colin D. Wilkinson, Exploitation Manager and Alan S. Hegburg, Manager, Corporate Affairs of the Phillips Petroleum Company (PPC).

Regarding the meeting, the Deputy Premier said the following:

Representatives of the PPC were in Mongolia on their own initiative. They came here in response to a tender announced by us on the conditions of exploitation, extraction and subsequently processing of oil on the territory of Mongolia. This private company, one of the ten largest US oil corporations, sent its envoys to study the possibility of establishing contacts and learning first-hand the details of a possible cooperation in the future. It must be noted that they did not have any concrete programme of exploiting oil on our territory.

During the talks, a number of suggestions were tabled. In particular, they were interested in obtaining from the Mongolian government priority rights to work in this direction. From our side, we did not express any commitments, as we want to develop competitiveness among the interested firms.

In other words, we would like to work with a company with the most acceptable for us project. On the other hand, the PPC suggested time-table for the exploitation of oil was not acceptable (from 6-9 years). As is known, the Government has already instructed the related bodies to begin work in this direction in 1993.

At the same time, our meeting with the envoys of PPC was useful. They made some valuable remarks and advice, which must be studied properly especially while establishing contacts with other firms. On the other hand, as distinct from us, they were not that interested in ensuring oil supplies to Mongolia as they were interested in their own commercial profits in the years ahead. Mongolia's top priority task is to ensure a self-sufficiency in liquid fuel.

Apart from this, they were satisfied as far as the juridical foundations for joint exploitation of oil on the territory of Mongolia was concerned. In this regard they admitted that good ground-work has been done. The company also expressed its preparedness to train personnel, draft technical documents.

I think that such a mutual exchange of information and views is beneficial to all sides concerned. The PPC has promised to draft a concrete project on the basis of understanding reached with the Mongol Gadzryn Tos (Mongolian Petroleum) Company. If their project corresponds to our interests and takes consideration of our preconditions, the Mongolian Government is prepared to work with the Phillips Petroleum Company.

Experts Look at Coal To Save Fuel Crisis

92P50027A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL
MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 3

[Article by Y. Yunden: "Fuel From Coal, a Likely Possibility"]

[Text] In the present conditions of serious fuel crisis, Mongolian scientists are looking for alternative sources of fuel and energy. Experts are optimistic that the Research Centre of Chemistry and Coal Technology will make a breakthrough in extracting gasolene from coal, which is available in plenty in this country, which could relieve the country of its energy crisis.

Solar energy, wind and sea waves. Fuel from sugarcane.... In a search for overcoming the energy crisis and in the face of growing ecological problems, scientists are looking for cheaper and ecologically-clean energy source.

By the end of 60's, the USA, Britain and Federal Germany had developed a technology of processing fuel from coal, peat, and other minerals, which were easily available.

According to researchers of the Centre under the MPR Ministry of Energy, the development of this branch is especially promising for Mongolia whereby she can solve the problem of transport fuel within the next few years.

T. Tsedebsuren, Candidate of Science (Technology), who is the head of the centre and who has been studying energy problems for more than 10 years now said: "Rich coal deposits in the country create favourable conditions for producing gasolene and kerosene from coal. We have developed a project, basing on the data obtained from our experiments, the realization of which would make it possible to produce by the year 2000, some 600,000 tonnes of liquid fuel a year (80 percent of the gasolene consumed today)."

According to scientists and economists, the Obdoghudag coal deposit in Dundgobi Province in the south, with an appropriate infrastructure and communication, would be the most adequate place for erecting an oil industrial complex.

"Proposals on cooperation in realizing this project were made 20 years ago, but because of an abundance of Soviet oil, the former Mongolian leaders waived off the offer," said T. Tsedebsuren.

"Today this issue becomes increasingly topical," considers Tsedebsuren. "The project will cost about US$600 million, which compared to the setting up of a national oil extracting and processing industry, promises to be cost-effective.

Fuel Crisis Hinders Mongolian Transportation System

92P50025A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL
MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 3

[Text] The fuel crisis increasingly tells on the every-day life of Mongolia. With a reduction of oil-products and fuel from the Soviet Union, the country is encountering serious setbacks and the Government is forced to take stringent measures to ensure the normal functioning of the transport.

The vast territory and the location of settlements far apart make auto-transport practically the sole reliable means of transporting freight and passengers. In order to ensure the stability of the economy, the country requires in one year at least 900,000 tons of fuel and oil products for freight and passenger transportation.

However, in view of the deepening economic crisis and a 50-percent drop in the supply of petroleum from the Soviet Union, the entire transport system of Mongolia has found itself in the grips of fuel crisis. More than one third of 40,000 state and more than 8,000 private cars are let without any fuel. Many of the domestic motor routes have been changed. The transportation of mail, periodicals and necessary commodities are being delayed. The question of supplying the necessary number of lorries for the harvesting remains a big problem.

In such circumstances, the Government had no other choice but to take stringent measures—it introduced from 1 July, 1991 limited supply of petroleum to both private and government vehicles. Only police, ambulance and fire department cars are not affected by this restriction.

Another similar action was taken early this August. The price of gasoline was increased almost five fold and consequently the bus and taxi fares and the cost of freight transport shot up drastically.

Naturally this spirals up inflation but the Government had no other choice especially when the country has to spend hard currency to buy fuel and combustibles from the USSR. In the previous years Mongolia bought 900,000 tons of petroleum a year, which cost almost one half of the country's export resources, but this year this figure has dropped to 400,000 tons.

The Government fully realizes the magnitude of the problem fraught with the danger of complicating the economic situation. In 1990 it decided to set up the Mongol Petroleum Company which has been instructed to start oil production within the next few years.

Alongside this much attention is being given to using solar and wind energy and appropriate agreements have been signed with a number of foreign firms and companies. Today, however, the situation does not look very promising as it will be some time before we know what the returns from these opportunities will be. Furthermore, the problem of fuel supply will be resolved only after taking the country out of the deep economic crisis as a whole.

Experts and scientists muse on the prospects and possibilities of resolving this problem.

Mongolian Democratic Association President Profiled

92P50023A Ulaanbaatar THE MONGOL MESSENGER in English 9 Sep 91 p 2

[Text] In other countries, the democratic transformations in Mongolia in the past one year are associated with the name of Sanjaasurengiyn Dzorig. This is quite true, as the 29-year-old post-graduate of the Mongolian State University, who was doing research on scientific communism, became one of the leading organizers and theoreticians of the democratic movement in the country.

What is paradoxical is the Dzorig, who initially chose to preach Marxism-Leninism, changed sides to criticize them.

Justifying his move, Dzorig says that during the so-called building of socialism in Mongolia many grave errors were committed which pushed the country to the brink of catastrophe, and the Mongolian people—to poverty. This is what prompted the imperative need to introduce a healthy and just relationship in the society, according to Dzorig.

S. Dzorig graduated from the Faculty of Philosophy of the Moscow State University in 1985.

He spent one year, after graduation, working as an instructor at the Ulaanbaatar city Committee of the Mongolian Revolutionary Youth Union. In 1986 Dzorig started working as a lecturer in scientific communism at the Mongolian State University. Currently he is working on a dissertation on the issues of streamlining the political systems of the Mongolian People's Republic.

Dzorig's maternal grandfather was A.D. Simukov, one of the well-known Mongolists in the USSR, who was repressed in 1938 and died in one of the many camps set up by Stalin.

S. Dzorig is concurrently working as the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Mongolian Parliamentary Group and President of the Amateur Body-building Society of Mongolia.

He likes to read sci-fi novels and literature on politics and astrology. He likes sports and music.

S. Dzorig is not married.
